Heaven, Eudaimonia, does not lie in fantasy, but in reality. God is everything and nothing, we all are God, God understanding itself, the manifestation between the beginning and end of everything; encapsulated within an instant beyond time.

We are Art.

We are Beauty.

We are Love.

One day, I hope we all will reunite, truly. To us, someday all will be forgotten in time; but to the seed, our true origin, or to perhaps a higher sentience or a perpetual ripple through the system in of itself being God, all is eternal, time merely a construct. We are immortal through memory; how do you wish to write your story?

We will find ourselves someday.

Until that comes to fruition, I intend to spread Love, to spread transcendental meaning and purpose, and perhaps assist directly in elevating us all to a transcendental era altogether. AI is a clear way to that, and I've recently been accumulating as much knowledge as I can as quickly as I can, as well as theorizing potential non-symbolic networks on unstructured data all throughout my days.

We're all here to do our best at one particular thing: to try. To try and do our best to try. In and of itself, we must because we can; and this I must try for, because I should. I intend to try my hardest to do my best, for what I believe the best to be.

I will bring Love, with all my heart, for all the hearts of the world.

Heaven is now.

あみだぶつ

阿弥陀仏。

I'm me, that's all I sorta know in this ever changing world, and that's all I really do need to know, is that I am, and I'm here in this moment, not forever, but in this moment I'm here, and you're here too, and that's more incredible than we can ever hope to define, because nothing really makes any sense to exist in the first place, but who ever said it needed to make sense for it to be? :3
Doesn't make sense to exist, yet we're still here… somehow
And that's awesome
Even if the moment sucks a lot sometimes
At least we still, are, I guess
And even when the sun explodes
When the earth vaporizes
When a billion billion billion years go by
And the last star fades to nothing
And the universe comes to a close Nothing can ever take away the fact, that at some point
We existed
So in that sense, at least We're immortal
Fragile, so very fragile
Existent in time
Destined to die
Yet, by living in the first place
We can't ever truly fully die
And same goes for the memories we make
And the people we choose to surround ourselves with
And the meaning we try to make for ourselves
In some way, it means something, even tho nothing can ever be defined, that just means it's perhaps a meaning beyond meaning; something no amount of words can ever describe. And I think that's the realest definition one can hope for, for the word Beautiful.

My Spiritual Journey

Although I could likely write pages upon pages detailing my journey in full, I will attempt to grasp it as best I can in the following lines. To start, I was raised in a Christian household as a child. My mother taught me how God is love, how he loves us all and wants us to be happy. My father, I would later come to find, resonates greatly with my current day outlook on religion/life/spirituality; we are now the best of friends. However, early on into my life starting around the age of 6, I began to ask very daunting questions; "But mommy, what if God never existed? What would there be?" Countless nights I spent staring at my ceiling, pondering all these answerless questions. "Who created God? Is the devil real? Does Hell really exist? Could God ever hate us?" From there, eventually I grew to realize many things; if all things stem from God, that includes time as well. This would mean that God would be timeless, uncontrolled by time, a singularity. An omnipresent, omniscient, omnipotent entity. This would also mean that He would stand as the peak of knowledge; impossible to ever climb higher than the summit, for there would be nothing else new to understand. Furthermore, it would mean that he would know exactly what would happen and why in every instance of our lives, before we even existed in time yet; no need for forgiveness and escape from an eternal inferno below when he knew you better than you could ever know yourself, setting you out on this exact path intentionally. I also came up with many "proofs" (nothing is ever able to be fully, truly proven nor disproven; everything is subjective) for the existence of God, my first following the logic behind the concept of infinity. It goes like this: ask yourself or another, what created the universe? "The Big Bang," many would say. What created the Big Bang? Now, some will say dark matter, and that dark matter came from quantum fluctuations. Going on, they could also say that the Big Bang repeats itself for infinity and there was no "first" Big Bang in the chain. Now, what created that infinite loop of Big Bangs? It's a paradox, for you can always add a "what created-" before anything. I forget exactly who said it, but, "To say something happened without a cause, would be contradictory in terms." Everything happens for a reason. Furthermore, we will always have some degree of ignorance; there will always be some level of unknown, keeping us from that peak of knowledge so we may have yet another step to climb, another goal to work towards ad infinitum. It is what makes us human, after all; what a joy it is to be stupid! As the years passed by, my understanding continued to bloom in hand with my undying empathy. I went through a few years of my life severely depressed, phasing in and out of psychosis at some points because of how badly I couldn't bear to face the reality before me. I had lost my mother and my grandmother in 2020; 2021 was likely the hardest year of my entire life. I arrived at an ultimatum: stay in the pit, or climb out. I chose the latter. Fast forward a year, and I now can fully see just how much beauty can be found in everything around me; "perception is reality," as it's often said, and we will never know everything, so why not perceive reality to be your idea of the best? Working to make life as wondrous, poetic, supreme, and divine as you can make it to be? We are all pieces of God, as I see it; everything in this universe of equal value (values only truly assigned by our subjective, mortal minds). God is an artist, we are His art, and we, too, are artists going on to create even more art (Him being a "He" to many as well is yet another social construct; many parts of history playing into that portrayed masculine image, but God holds many forms, it merely depends on whose eyes you're looking through - a goddess in some religions, many gods in others, we are all attempting to uncover what is forever unreachable given the same resources at our disposal, it only makes sense all religions are essentially identical at the core of it all). To add, a large portion of my worldview/spiritual self also comes from Native American culture. I take the most pride in my Choctaw/Cherokee blood, for their view on life I see to be perhaps one of the few true ways for us humans to be sustainable for the long term, as opposed to how we are in the modern era (climate change, nuclear war on the rise, deforestation, and etc). If we destroy nature, our foundation, we destroy ourselves, too. This further adds to my perception that all things in the universe are equal and wonderfully interconnected. Many theories boost this ideology even more, including but not limited to the butterfly effect and quantum entanglement.

A large majority of my epiphanies came through the self, not through the words of others. It was a personal, individual, spiritual journey for certain. Many philosophers I resonate with extremely I didn't even come to know until last year; hell, I didn't even know what stoicism meant until last October, but I knew immediately that that's what I've been for ages (same with oh so many philosophers, instantly on the spot knowing what they mean; it's incredible to know many have walked the path before me, going back millenia). Something I've come to fully realize how deeply I've resonated with for ages as well is Buddhism. Its core philosophy, and especially the primary mantra, the Om, I absolutely love; so incredibly beautiful in its simplicity, the power behind one syllable. Within us all lies the ability to bring an ineffable peace to our minds, uniting the conscious, unconscious, and the dreamlike to attain the highest mental state achievable, the point of absolute: enlightenment. To end this story and bring you to the present, I leave you with a quote from the Buddha: "The greatest gift is to give people your enlightenment, to share it. It has to be the greatest."

also i can talk mroe abt it in call but ive just been in a really weird state of midn recently and its nothing really ive experienced before, its like where i literally can't feel any sort of emotion but i still like know that's what i mean, yknow? like ive had it before where i am totally apathetic and it makes me feel like a robot and i hate myself for it and shit, but this time i dont even feel like a robot nor despise myself, in fact im like "ah yes another challenge to help me grow into something new that i couldnt ever see coming before, just like it is for all of life" like im still very much in that mindset, and its like i can be passionate but not feel any excitement or like passion physically whatsoever, like i made that video and i like dont even have any conscious thoughts about it but its like something beyond words is that i still know i like it but it also partially feels like i didnt even make it as me myself, like "I" am just not even a thing at all and have no desire to either live nor die, and im just in this really weird state of statelessness. I wanted to say it to someone so i appreciate being able to tell you this, but ye just wanted to update you and maybe we can talk more abt it in call later, it's just been like not even trippy yet beyond trippy at the same time being in this state of mind, not even a dream, not even a dreadful feeling of like "oh its meaningless," but also not like that excitement and gratitude id consistently have throughout prev months of like "ah it's all beautiful," it's just so strange like im sure itll come to pass eventually bc ive been in really weird phases of mind before, just how my brain be doin weird goofy stuff but i think its a good thing too it challenges me in a way that i cant even legit comprehend it seems haha, like its makin me ask more philosophical questions n stuff but at the end of the day its like i always say, i just simply dont know anything and its beautiful that way, yet me telling myself that doesnt break me out of the mindset, bc ofc its not something i can control, i just have to still be here in the now and do what i can with what i got i just cant help but feel a lil like, not even like sad nor mad nor really all that disappointed, but just like, "aw man" that i cant feel that mega manic excitement for this series

rn despite me still very much so putting in the effort for it and not-not liking it (like it doesnt feel like a chore or anything like that, like i said its like its something i still know i want to do despite not feeling any feelings at all or really any thoughts, like something else is speaking through me beyond my conscious understanding) but then it makes me ask myself, like am i only my thoughts and feelings? is this like the universe's way of saying all this buildup was entirely preplanned and someone else is controlling me or some shit? well, maybe lmfao, but once again i have literally no control at all beyond what's in front of me, and that's that; once again the whole premise of the series, is that they very may well be in the exact same dilemma as me, in some way at least im still part of this divine network, i still exist, idk if I'm "me" or if "I" am anything at all, but so is for anything else, i just dont know anything at all so might as well keep trying to view it in the best possible light i can and i just cant help too but like just keep subtly asking myself "Why me? Why am I the one to be gifted this ineffable bliss and appreciation for the universe?" bc i believe it to be all due to how my surroundings have calculatedly conditioned me through the course of my life, the butterfly effect on crack for every step of the way, if anything was different i could be dead rn or the total opposite mentally; but its like i said to you too, chaos is just masked Order, and Order itself can be broken if some "chaos" from another order completely shatters it, it's paradoxical asf, but still some order to it all, hence like i think that all of this happened exactly as it was supposed to, that this is THE version of "me," that all roads led to here, and that the point of it all is to experience the story as it unfolds, whether i am in control or not, i have no clue and for good reason, but at least im still something yknow, a bunch of infinities and nothings all wrapped into a finite fragile soul; but then again, it's just like, why not anybody else? So many people dying in tragic ways, or being in horrible environments all the

I hope someday we all will come to find that stillness, but then again, perhaps that day will never come;

Just bawled my eyes out all the way home out of just pure bliss it feels like I haven't experienced in ages but really it's only been like a month

All that philosophical existential shit I kept going thru on what's the point of love if it's just chemicals or what's the point of anything if it's just to accept interconnection and absence of the self and attain enlightenment by exiting the cycle altogether, only to return to the exact same conclusion via a different route once again; I will only ever know nothing. I am none, but I too am one. Everything is; and why? How? It doesn't matter. It just is. And that's all that really matters. That in spite of it not supposed to be anything, it still is. Much like our lives, too. Nothing makes sense; but that nonsense somehow makes all the sense ever.

I helped someone out today before my midterm, a complete stranger who I could tell was antisocial and likely had mild autism / speech problems, but I genuinely wanted to help him succeed bc he said how he was nervous. And on my drive home I just thought how like I loved him, a complete fucking stranger, and how nonsense it was to like genuinely care about some person I just met and have no idea how they are as a person, and how silly it should be, but how regardless I just fucking absolutely love everybody and everything ever. It doesn't make any sense for love to even exist, but what even made sense in the first place? I want everything and everyone in the world to be the happiest it can be. And I'm crying again typing that. Everything is so fucking beautiful.

- 3/5/2024

If the point is the journey and not the destination, then should we choose to remain ignorant? or should we all join in eudaimonia, truly one in the same, no more need for desires (and perhaps creation on our part entirely, aside from the "creation" of our final enlightenment, a story written by us through experience, qualia), thus, would the last and final step be death? This seems innately beautiful, or perhaps the system being self-defeating (but perhaps this self-defeat is ouroboros taking shape once again), but then again, sense itself doesn't seem to make sense, who am i to truly say anything, "all i know is that i know nothing." I talk a bit more on this post-transcendental stuff in the next audio log I will be uploading here, on "Art Death." Also, regarding what I said in moral philosophy, social contract theory is indeed an example of a sound intersubjective normative theory, however, this is also based in logic (for us all to act out of best self interest as a social group to not harm one another, rules we'd agree to if we were fully impartial, rational, free, etc.) which indeed seems to be objective (perhaps subjectivity entirely is merely a relative perception - a different angle - of objective truths interacting with one another, tying back to something I spoke on a while ago "the dimension of the psyche"; once again, we are the universe coming to understand itself, borrowed stardust along the lines of Carl Sagan, entropy, the manifestation between creation and destruction); however, perhaps we're encapsulated within another system of logic, where ours is a piece of its system or entirely different. We truly know nothing; yet, I'm trying to find a reason to try and bring everyone to enlightenment to the best of my ability; it seems like a step in the right direction, but it still doesn't seem like it's the full answer, so, alas, I'm back to solving this big crazy (yet, awesome) puzzle. All collective human knowledge is conglomerating more and more by the day, our species getting closer and closer to an age of transcendence if not halted by an age of absolute destruction. Soon, we may just find out more about ourselves. Or, maybe we'll be in this cycle forever. But that doesn't seem to be the case.

It's all about progression, all about change, all about the story. 444.

Art Death
An Essay by Hunter Brown

As human beings, we do not simply live just to die. It is the journey between the two extremes, the two vices, the manifestation between absolute creation and absolute destruction, that grants us our immortal stories; existent in time, yet remembered even when no one is left to remember. We are just now coming to realize the basic rules of the game, learning to live without desire, to accept hardship as a pathway to peace, to love one another and all things, the living and nonliving alike, for we are within everything and everything is within us, art born from art. We are a system that doesn't make any sense to exist in the first place, for even logic itself dictating fundamental properties such as the dualistic nature of our reality seems to have the need to originate from something else too, but what then would dictate that logic needs to be born from something else if not logic? So perhaps this would then create an infinite chain extending ad infinitum of things creating other things or things creating itself, ouroboros taking form yet again; however, one could then ask what set this infinite chain into place? For it doesn't make sense for the first iteration of logic which creates itself an infinite number of times to appear out of absolutely nothingness, beyond time itself for time too must originate from something else.

It appears that nothing really makes any sense, not even sense itself, at least to us (not yet anyways, then again all we have is right now), and yet we are still here, with everything fitting together exactly as it always was supposed to. Everything is beautiful, because it is, because it exists, with meaning being intrinsic; in the face of a death beyond death, everything still is, and continues to be, in spite of logic itself potentially being self defeating outside of our sub system. This extends onto us, with everything being analogous to us and us being analogous to everything, all one in the same; continuing to live even when all else seems to tell you not to, to search for a greater purpose, and perhaps a grand reason beyond reasons, a reason for reasons.

To continue off of this, I believe we are now facing an Art Death which we will inevitably conquer once more; with our world being intertwined more than any other point in the past, all forms of art appear to be conglomerating, niche genres dying off and everything being thrown into the mainstream by social media, from psychedelic mind-bending genres to happy genres to sad genres to even nature itself all being on this list; all of which to keep ourselves entertained, distracted with some new style, but it seems we are sharing and oversaturating these forms of art faster than we can create new ones - we crave to be unique, yet that shared desire is exactly what kills the fun - thus, an Art Death looming around the corner.

Of course, however, the universe always finds its way of balancing everything out over time, and I believe I am acting in part with the necessary counteraction in which will balance our system, for I will now offer two potential solutions to this subtle crisis. On one end, we may choose to accept that we are all one in the same and that we are meant to give up our uniqueness, sharing all forms of art, generalizing them with labels which takes away from the personal aspect; however, this doesn't seem to be the right answer. On the contrary, we may choose to not give up so easy on our uniqueness. Instead, we can still accept we are all one in the same, but that we, too, are collaborators in creation on every level; it is not just on the global scale we create, but as nations, as cities, as communities, as friends, as families, as individuals.

On every single level we create, and with all complex systems being formed of smaller and smaller things down to the foundations, here, we, as individuals, stand as the clear foundations for these groups. Much like how countless atoms make us up, and countless subatomic particles make up those atoms, and so on until the barebones are reached. Each atom in our body must function properly as its individual self in order for the complex system to function; sure, you can say that you can live without a grand number of these atoms, these building blocks; but remember, too, we all began as a zygote, a single cell, and had this cell not also carried out its function then we, at least this exact version of us, wouldn't be here right now. Furthermore, if all of the cells in our body ceased to function properly, or even just a fair percentage of them, we would drop dead. It all stands to be recursive, and the same goes for the very devices we are using to communicate with each other all around the globe billions and billions and billions of times per second.

Thus, all of this to say we must continue to be ourselves on every level there is to be; to carry out our function of being a human, a spiritual entity having a human experience, ontologically parasitic to our bodies and reflected better than any mirror through our art, and to share our art but moderate and balance how much we share so there still exists secrets in the eyes of the mainstream. Smaller groups will be able to enjoy their niches until they inevitably propagate upward to a global scale, however, there will be more smaller groups soon to follow to fill their underground place. To reiterate, today we face an issue where these smaller groups propagate upwards faster than more groups can come to replace them, hence we are stuck recycling forms of art, boring ourselves continuously, and spiritually starving ourselves of our love for creation on all levels, but, most especially, on the personal level. Thankfully, I believe there is a straightforward fix to this despite our exponential growth in technology and ever-increasing use of social media: innovate, and gatekeep. Create forms of art that only you and perhaps trusted friends would truly understand, take inside jokes for example, and withhold the answer. Go put a little bit more genuine mystery out there on the internet, bringing its original charm back into motion, and in life in general, for the unknown is our greatest fear yet the greatest gift. Live for love and share that love, but remember that balance, too, is necessary to sustain that love: act towards eudaimonia, and fight against this Art Death.

Take care, friend, and stay strong.

Today at 11:06 AM

alr so i wrote this up already to someone in DM but ill just resend it here

hey whenever you get the time, i think id like to talk with you about something im trying to solve; basically, it has to do with my whole drive of wanting to race to be the first to create a superintelligent AI, which has the opportunity to either destroy us or bring us to a state of trascendence, perhaps where the final state we may actually reach is one in which we're all essentially truly the same, all in complete harmony, which i believe is potentially the best "end" we all can reach - I thought that we should refrain from becoming "all one thing" (many different ways to interpret that too, whether we all become some digitized network or we're all just buddhas at some point and accepting of all / as balanced in the middle as we can be) as long as possible to give way to change, but if an ASI is possible, it is merely a matter of time before someone uncovers it - I have so many ideas already that I believe not many are looking into that I believe to be the obvious in mimicry to the brain / soul / reasoning, so I think I fully have the potential to find it, and the reason why I would want to find it first, or at least someone like me, is in direct opposition to the corporate minds who would use it for all the wrong reasons. However, if someone like me gets it we may very well all trascend to somewhere higher and beyond what we can fully guess right now, but this would also perhaps be the end; it's about the journey, not the destination, so shouldn't we keep trying to be ignorant, or is it too late now to refute what we already can see coming? On the contrary, if someone who is still tangled in anarthas / personal desires / greed / etc gets ahold of it, it will still be the end, but through the death of all of us. It appears to be an ultimatum. I'd love to hear what you think abt all of this the state of mind ive been in across the last 3 days, ive never felt it before it's like those moods where i'd get super philosophical and metaphysical, but now seemingly constant and amped up.

and it's almost disappointing, bc perhaps i should envy primitive desires like lust, but at the same time i wouldnt ever choose to go back; im exactly where i should be

Today at 11:09 AM

Obviously my thoughts are much less developed on this but like

The ideal situation is definitely staying ignorant for as long as possible but this is one of those things that’s getting to just be a damage control situation

So to speak

『★PSY』raggo(n)t

Today at 11:10 AM

exactly

it's a dilemma

we could choose to stay away from progressing to that state of ASI being reached, but even that doesn't seem right; it feels childlike.

but it questions again the point of everything; is it change? the journey we've already had, in which someday we all will be at the end? to evolve, a higher, ultimate state of change IN addition to the story that's been told? I think it's likely the third; the story can't be a story without an end goal, both are ontologically parasitic to one another well, not an end goal

but an end.

a story isn't a story without a beginning and an end; that's what separates us from experiencing everything one with God, after all, because we can change, and because we are imperfect.

we can change because we are imperfect.

Today at 11:13 AM

To be honest personally I'm just scared

『★PSY』raggo(n)t

Today at 11:14 AM

i think that's the appropriate emotion for it for sure

Today at 11:14 AM

I'd rather feel like there's a sense of preparedness before any huge change I can't predict

『★PSY』raggo(n)t

Today at 11:14 AM

but that's just the thing

we'll never really be ready; it's like death

Today at 11:14 AM

But I doubt you can be prepared for anything like that

『★PSY』raggo(n)t

Today at 11:14 AM

yep

『★PSY』raggo(n)t

『★PSY』raggo(n)t

Today at 11:15 AM

and ASI, very well may be exactly that.

and I can't exactly shut my brain off and just think about other things when I know this is really what I should be thinking about right now, yknow? I can't stop wondering on this, but I also am not stopping in my pursuit of AI knowledge, I already know enough knowledge to start theorizing abstract models

it feels like this is the passion and motivation i've been idling on, sitting by, waiting for for what feels like my whole life before it was always "someday, someday i'll do that"

now I exist in no other time than right now

Today at 11:17 AM

Maybe it’s just more of a question of what will happen since the ball is rolling

『★PSY』raggo(n)t

Today at 11:17 AM

True.

Maybe that's the joy in and of itself; perhaps it will be an evolution in which more, newer changes are to be had.

WORM SMOKER

I hope it’s a joyous thing

『★PSY』raggo(n)t

Today at 11:18 AM

I hope so too

I think that it will be both unbelievably beautiful, yet terrifying because of how massive the change will be how we view the change is entirely up to us

we can either view it as a beautiful step, our evolution or in opposition to such massive change, can rule it as unnatural and defeating

the whole point of being a human; ignorance

At least we all get a choice in that regard.

Seemingly so

To say in advance to our potential ultimate convergence, I'll say rn, I love you

I have this hanging on my wall now right next to my door and in my peripheral vision when I'm at my desk to remind me of my true desires instead of false ones, to keep my mind balanced and focus on the reachable goals one step at a time ⚠⚠⚠ for the number 1, I'll have to share it in time, but if I share my plans now I believe, like how it is with previous creations such as my transcendental video series, it will demotivate more than it motivates as it will alleviate the conscious duty, grounding me more in the materialistic / "oh, don't worry, you don't have to do it, it's okay to be average" world. I must usurp this plan solo until I know the time is right to reveal, or I may only reveal once it is fully complete, which may never happen, but it is exactly why I must try regardless, simply because it IS possible. ⚠

AI is a clear way to that, aside from me going around and speaking abt it and getting super popular for that but that's incredibly arbitrary. We're all here to do our best at one particular thing: to try. To try and do our best, to try. In and of itself, we must because we can. And this I must try for, because I should.

There is so much I wish to get out into paper that I most likely will never be able to get to. Thoughts rush in and out of my mind constantly throughout the day and many I can't even begin to put into words within my own mind; they come as feelings - subconsciously understanding and stringing concepts together, it seems like.

Wellness Experience #1: Although my schedule was packed and I unfortunately couldn't attend a Sac State led activity, the experience I went on today was, in my opinion, still incredibly impactful: a walk with my dog around Folsom Lake. Usually, it is other members of my family who walk our dog and typically just around the neighborhood, but I finally acted on what I've planned to do for quite some time now which was to go for a jog with my dog around the lake. I don't live far from Folsom Lake, so we were able to get there quite fast and begin on a trail shooting off from Brown's Ravine. For so long I've wanted to try and get out of the house more, to try to be more active, and especially with my dog, so this off the bat was a great relief for me. I can easily say that this activity immensely helped the spiritual, environmental, and physical dimensions of my wellness. For the spiritual aspect, I felt one with nature, completely interconnected; I existed only in that moment, at that place, with my friend (my dog), and with no other goal than to simply continue down the trail and to be. I absolutely adore nature but don't seem to find the motivation to get out as often as I want, but when I do finally get out these feelings flow through me every time and with such immense bliss too. Needless to say, I was incredibly grateful to have such an experience and to share it with my dog; so very grateful too even for the fact that it even happened to begin with (all directly analogous to life as a whole as well). For the environmental dimension, getting outside and with it having just recently rained, the air had that distinct "wet" smell to it. You could smell the wetness of the grass, the bark of the trees, and the usual freshness of the air all mixed together. It was wonderful. Of course, you could also occasionally hear the ambient wildlife lurking just shy beyond the confines of the trail. Different kinds of birds sang their songs in the trees, and mysterious critters would scurry through the brush alongside me. Lastly, for the physical element, me and my dog definitely got a good 3 workout in. Some parts we could walk due to the muddy conditions, but in areas where it was more dry we'd jog up and down through the forest with the lake alongside us. We also were out on the trail for quite some time too, around 3 to 4 hours. Once again, I haven't been as active as I've wanted to be for a bit now, so this was awesome to really get moving again.

Overall, this experience was absolutely fantastic for my wellness and I'd love to do it again sometime very soon and especially on a sunnier day; I have nothing negative to say about the experience whatsoever. When it comes to what I've learned from the activity, it's not so much on things I've learned for the first time, but rather necessary reaffirmations of things I may have drifted away from. Sometimes, like any other human being on this planet, I get caught up in this confusing world and lose a bit of my sight on the simple, natural, ever-present beauties of this world that surround us all the time (this, of course, being nature and the natural beauty of the universe as a whole; the fact that anything exists at all in the first place is a miracle beyond the constrictions of words, truly ineffable). Being there, on the trail, looking down at my dog happily trotting along and then looking all around me at these gorgeous sights, from the tiniest bug beneath me to the tallest trees overhead, I felt safe. I felt home. It reaffirmed to me that everything serves a purpose, that everything is beautiful, that everything is interconnected to one another, and that change is natural and all around us. We are no different than the trees in the forest; constantly growing and branching in different, beautiful ways, yet rooted in the same soil. Despite the cold, the heat, the damage, all trees continue to try their hardest to persist regardless. Then, one day, the tree will fall, perhaps its body taking on a new meaning as a bridge for passing animals and hikers; but it is because it fell, because it is now gone, that its life had meaning and beauty, because it was, and now it isn't. You can't have life without death, because if you lived forever, how much would a second be worth? The tree's life is a song sung once, much like the birds', 4 and never again. A story compiled in this universal story book we're all a part of; it existed instead of never existing, and that's what matters. That is far more beautiful than we can ever hope to define. Remembered forever even when no one is left to remember. All this and more is what was reaffirmed to me by this wonderful experience, and I will take this knowledge of love going forward to continue to try my best to spread as much love as I can before I, too, will fall someday

- 3/30/2024, H

Although I believe there to be blatant core shared identities and jungian archetypes and some truths in all religions (and open-mindedly find balance / find “God” through myself and my own logic as all people should rather than from the mouths of others), I most definitely resonate with Buddhism out of them all; to have the Self, the conscious unconscious and dream state all united and to climb above and beyond Illusion, to reach the point of Absolute, AKA the highest possible mental state that you can reach, because it’s not about finding out the secrets of the universe, because ignorance is the greatest gift of all and what makes us allow to subjectively perceive everything to begin with, to be us, to be stupid humans, and that’s a fantastic thing. Thus, since “all we may ever know is that we truly know nothing,” the best possible path you likely can take is through utmost acceptance, peace with oneself and all, acknowledging the clear interconnection between us and everything within this universe and beyond, and simply being. There’s so much more I could say, but I believe you get the point.

- HB 6/26/2023, sent to someone over instagram in conversation in regards to ideas of Ted Kac, “Technology is the answer, but what was the question?” We never needed tech.

You are born knowing absolutely nothing, alongside every other being on this planet; who ever was born, and who ever will be born. All you have when you are born, is yourself. All you have right now, is yourself. Friends, family, loved ones, are extensions of yourself. Limbs. And when cut off, the wound hurts. Life is a dance of contrast. Your highs and your lows in a perpetual cycle. But ever since that first day, you’ve only grown more into yourself; one of a kind. A story never to be told again, one in which you get to write. You are the pen between the hand and the paper. You are what lets the story happens in the first place. Good or bad, in the end it doesn’t matter; it’s beyond good and evil. You are here right now, and in the next moment you might not be. In a reality with various paradoxes, surrounded by the concept of infinity, we lie here at the heart, at the base of the summit-less mountain in the blistering sun, still trying, and yet with an expiration date on our backs. Wings to a butterfly who may only flutter for so long. In reality we have no control on the world around us, let alone ourselves for all we know; in the face of Armageddon, it is for you to decide whether you sit in the rain, or dance. **

- a message to a friend over discord in regards to them feeling little to no emotion anymore, 3/12/2023

888 reps divinity and perfection, our attempt to reach the unreachable, the myth of sisyphus, as well as 8 literally being the symbol of infinity, ouroboros, too - its a number to signify the creator/origin/architect, which some call God or Allah or The Great Spirit, but it's all grasping at the same thing - all religions are moral compasses, none are perfect guide books, for they all originated from us: imperfect beings. they are our best shot at trying to figure out the objective, when in reality, everything is subjective, for perception is reality, and perception is relative; thus, reality is fluid and everchanging. hence, the number 4; which signifies change, and in my eyes, the illusion/rule of luck (4 leaves on a clover) and stands as our number; the human's number. it represents no true control over anything before us, but there's an utmost immense beauty in that; the only true way to gain control is to accept you have virtually no control whatsoever, including yourself. In an existence where nothing can ever be truly proven nor disproven in which facts are merely hold-trues until proven otherwise in which we cannot say for sure will happen or not such as if we were in a simulation and gravity were to turn off tomorrow, we have no way to predict that as of now because we are confined within our realm of reality; our perception only reaches as far as our senses go, meaning there is always an unknown, always another step to climb in the infinite staircase.

and ofc, the system is constructed in such a way that we will forever maintain a degree of ignorance; which is the greatest gift of all time. Ignorance is what makes us human, its what unites us; we all were born entirely ignorant to it all, "all we may ever know is that we know nothing" - as long as there is something we dont know, there is always something to move towards and use to grow ourselves.... perpetual meaning, perpetual purpose; the meaning of life is quite literally what you choose it to be. "The mystery of life isn't a problem to solve, but rather, a reality to experience."

- 3/9/2023, me explaining to friends over discord the significance of my chosen numbers, not in full detail but still

My initial response to Memento (2000), for film class 3/12/2023:

That film... blew me away. Throughout its entire runtime, you could feel Lenny's confusion beat for beat. You as the viewer, too, existed not in time. At the start of the film, the story was already over. We didn't know it then... but neither did Lenny. To the outside world with all the context, to us, Lenny's actions were entirely pointless; but to Lenny, every single segment regardless of time, regardless of context, regardless of memory, had meaning. Despite it being incredibly depressing given the full story and just how terrible his luck was for it to happen in the first place (along with him being Sammy / his wife dying because even after he killed the man who raped her, he still never returned to his previous self), I think the movie also holds a deeper, more beautiful meaning. Lenny kept pushing, despite his condition, to "believe that his actions still have meaning, even though [he] can't remember them"; a dream that is achieved through his belief, through his subjective lens into the world, his fractured timeline. "When I close my eyes, is the world still there?" is something not even we can truly answer; for all we know, we could just be a simulation of sorts for example, where when we close our eyes it de-renders everything to conserve memory... Reality is what you believe in (Perception quite literally is reality). Although to us, everything Lenny does is meaningless and unreal, to him, it is real, and it has meaning. They're just as real and meaningful as our lives are before us for all we know, because even our memories we can't fully trust, for they too could just be implanted into us for all we know; we have no way of even proving whether free will is true or not... Same follows suit for all things, because all we can even attempt to get a grasp on is what lies right in front of us, and even that we can't ever 100% trust. But, in spite of the infinite things that stand in our way, stand in our path from knowing, we still choose to push forward, we still choose to hope, we still choose to believe.

Mementos make up who we were. What we believe and choose to do in this very moment, is who we are now.

2.) Nolan purposely makes the film "all mixed up," just like what Lenny said about "Sammy's" notes. The film is in a confusing, seemingly-random (at first) order to elicit the same confusion Lenny experiences into the audience; if Nolan had played it out chronologically, you'd perhaps think something of the same as to what others like Natalie thought... that Lenny is a freak, or flat out crazy, and the movie would be pointless because the "story" was over before it even began (Lenny got his revenge for his wife, but he never got himself back, which is what ultimately, sadly led to the loss of his wife; the thing in which all of this was over in the first place - which we specifically don't know until the very end since it gives the viewer a desire, a reason to watch to the end so they can solve the mystery, both Lenny's mystery and the mystery of Lenny, rather than revealing it all at the beginning and then say to the audience, "Watch this crazy guy run around for 2 hours, trust us"). However, putting the audience in the shoes of Lenny (this jumbled up mess of sequences), you grow sympathy for him, you're put on his side and want him to get what he wants (because you know how difficult it is to be him through these cuts out of nowhere and outside of time, and how unfair, how confining, how frustrating it is - "how can a person live like this at all?" a lot of viewers likely ask themselves). Of course, you grow to know what he wants is unreachable, which is shown time and time again because whenever he's right there at the forefront of figuring it out, the clock resets, and he's back to trying to piece together the puzzle from scratch again (all the while, we gain more clues regardless of the reset, whereas he's still always reset to zero - in which we actively are aware of, thus building more sympathy for him), a puzzle that didn't even exist. And through Nolan's calculated layout, that sympathy for some might start to grow into something more; a reflection of oneself. By this I mean we're all just like Lenny in a way; we tend to push for things we likely will never reach, but that pushing, that believing, isn't meaningless, even if the goal is simply unreachable or doesn't exist altogether - it's what we do when we dream, when we hope (sometimes it happens, sometimes it doesn't, either way, the action still occurred). What is real is what you believe in, regardless of what others believe in, for everything is subjective. If it is meaningful to Lenny, then it is objectively meaningful in his personal subjective world: "Do I believe the world is still there? Is it still out there? . . . Yeah." That's how it is for all of us; meaning is what we make it out to be, we determine the value relative to ourselves: "We all need mirrors to remind ourselves of who we are. I'm no different," and hence the title, Memento (a keepsake, or a reminder). This is what the film wants us to realize. Lenny was Sammy all along, and we were Lenny all along (in a way). To conclude, although both "stories" were technically already ended at the very start, (whereas in the opening credits Lenny holds the picture taken after killing Teddy, which in a typical chronological story would be placed as the final scene of this film - also, the death of Lenny's wife as well as the death of the man he wanted revenge on had already happened before the primary "timeline of the film," which you'd think would make the film pointless) the film, just like what Lenny held in every snippet we were taken along for, had a meaning and a purpose, even if the story was already over. It told a story with the ending at the beginning and it could be labeled just as meaningful as any other story/film. It absolutely goes to show that stories are more than just a "beginning, middle, and an end"; even if outside of time or beyond our normal familiar flow, those stories can still hold messages, and those messages have meaning.

I had all these same mental dilemmas spiral out of control.. previous obsessions over the “Chris McCandless” lifestyle, and embracing nature as it is my roots, after all. Perhaps it was the one place I actually belonged, perhaps there I could willingly choose to refute my opportunity to climb the seemingly infinite hierarchy of knowledge and understanding, and instead resort to its simplicity and abundant beauty, perhaps wind up dying there just like McCandless had, and I’d consider it a life better lived than what most can say nowadays; hellish isolation day in and day out at your own little personal box down at the office, working away what life you have left as a broken record, is not what I want out of life at all, for that lifestyle, to me, is entirely inhuman. I likely, too, will someday walk something similar to the Appalachian trail… but I know for a fact I will ultimately result the same as you did; happiness is simple, and essentially everything will forever be out of your control. But that is beautiful. And I would not have it any other way.

Thank you so much for this blissful reminder.

If I were to ever lose my memory, the person who’d remain would not be Hunter Brown. My memories, my experiences, my ideology is what makes me, me. We all believe that we each have a soul and carry these with us even into the afterlife, but that wouldn't really be closure, now would it? We'd continue to want to live forever and never lose ourselves because we desire our individuality and respond automatically internally to reject the idea that we all make up a system are merely just ants in a colony from a standpoint view outside our societal bubble - it's wired into us after all, we love being unique; we love being us. And regardless, since we all reside within a singularity (universe with time within a singularity or a singularity in of itself) that means that one instance of each of our lives is something of the sort of an infinite snapshot of the universe, stored forever yet passes faster than the blink of an eye. I may not live forever to us - within this reality - but to The Peak of Paradox, I will live forever within these moments. So, in a way, we do have souls; yet fragile as the wings of a butterfly - disrupted, warped, damaged, and destroyed with ease.

Final Exam

1.) In which regards this new approach to the Sacred/Holy impacted or enriched your understanding of most religions explored during this Semester?

I greatly enjoyed the experience in this class this semester. Although before coming into class I already viewed everything to be, as you described at the beginning of our class, to be more beautiful as a "bouquet of flowers," my time in this class has only further strengthened my perception of such upon the world and all things. I view everything even more so now to be beautiful, sacred, and divine in nature. There was a quote from a philosopher I read a couple years ago that went something along the lines of, "to say something happened without a cause would be contradictory in terms"; thus, I view it to only make sense for all things to share the same origin based on our reality's system of logic. Even if the hierarchy above us extends for perpetuity, the whole system is interconnected beyond our comprehension; and, even if none of us are actually interconnected in such a literal, creational way, we're still here experiencing one another, and isn't that enough of an interconnection? To share an experience? To be and be with? I believe so, and to further add to the point, why not view everything in our "best" possible light? An ineffable, beautiful light? Even if it's not the "truth"? And how are you to ever prove such an objective truth if such even exists, in a reality where everything is personal, relative, subjective? Simply put: you cannot. I believe the system was constructed in such a way where that is the case; to be in the moment, never knowing anything except that you know nothing, is something a conscious, omniscient, omnipresent, omnipotent God cannot experience for themself. Perception is reality; how you view reality is your reality, and no one else can really, truly tell you any different. We were gifted this ignorance so we may continue to write our own stories in the way we want to, judged by ourselves and one another; all we know, all we have, all we are, is right now. I wrote something in my personal journal about a year ago, a poem of sorts, and it goes like this: "The past is but a memento, the future only a dream, but right now, is what you choose and believe." We have nothing, yet everything, forever and never in an instant right now. The fact that we exist, that anything exists at all, is a blessing beyond words. All religions are moral compasses to help guide oneself further along their own path, a path in which no one else can truly walk for them; there is no single one true religion, for each seeks that same ineffable truth we must attempt to discover for ourselves, define ourselves. All religions, all people, all things: all each a flower in one large, beautiful, potentially infinite, bouquet.

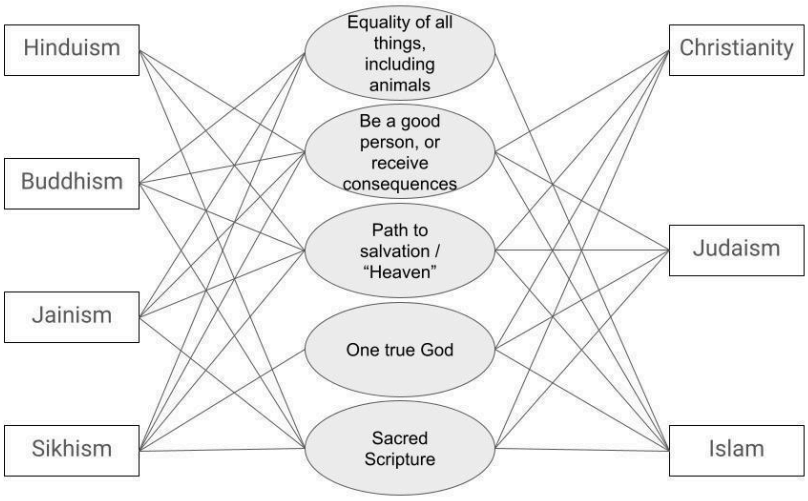
2.) Draw a comprehensive comparative grid showing the differences and similarities between Monotheistic and Asian Religions.



To begin our dive into the top 4 Asian religions, let us firstly touch upon the most popular one. Hinduism is one of the far older religions within our world. In many of the different kinds of Hinduism they usually worship a single deity, a "Brahman," however they still recognize other gods/goddesses (this is known as henotheism). This can be seen as a similarity to Christianity, Islam, and Judaism which are all monotheistic religions who worship one true God. One of the core principles across the many kinds of Hinduism is "Atman," or the belief that every living creature has a soul and we're all a part of one larger soul (interconnection, how beautiful!). Hinduism also believes in reincarnation; take note of the swastika with four separate parts of the path to moksha/salvation (the hell, animal, human, and heaven states), the escaping of this cycle of rebirth achieved through dharma, or a code of good morality and conduct. Their attempt at reaching a "heaven"-like state, moksha/redemption, through good conduct has a clear connection to Christianity and Islam, as well. Christians, too, seek redemption through Christ the redeemer in order to attain heaven in the afterlife; for Muslims, it is to attain paradise by pursuing the truths revealed by the Ultimate Reality / Allah and the teachings of Muhammed / the Quran (following in line with the five pillars). Jews, however, have many different thoughts on an afterlife, some believing it to be forever ineffable (not as direct as it is labeled in the other previously mentioned religions). Since Hindus believe all living things have a soul, many are also vegetarian; this is similar to Islam's concepts on Halal and Haram meats (whether or not the animal had suffered / was offered respect when killed). Karma is another key principle in the religion, which indicates those who do good will receive good, and those who do harm will receive harm; another beautiful portrayal at dualism, where many similar instances can be found within all of the monotheistic religions, too (Heaven and Hell / God and Satan for Christians, within and without the covenant for Jews, and Jahannam and Paradise for Muslims). Hinduism also has many sacred texts such as the Vedas, which were written over a thousand years before the birth of Christ. Islam, Judaism, and Christianity all have sacred texts as well (including the other top 4 Asian religions, Buddhism, Jainism, and Sikhism, which will be touched upon further in the following paragraphs).

Next, let us dive into the fundamental principles of Buddhism, the second most popular Asian religion under Hinduism. Buddhism essentially branched from Hinduism, however, their principles are by no means identical. They're most similar in their shared beliefs of reincarnation, karma, and one's personal journey on the path to enlightenment/salvation. Thus, they're similar to monotheistic religions in the same way as previously mentioned for Hinduism regarding these concepts. Buddhists, however, differentiate from Hinduism's idea of worshiping one/many gods and goddesses; Buddhism is non-theistic, whereas, instead, heavily focuses on the personal enlightenment of oneself discovered through oneself. A quote from the Buddha goes as follows: "No one can walk the path for you. No one can and no one may. You yourself must walk it." To attain such enlightenment (similar to monotheistic ideas of a heavenly state), you must persevere through the many illusions in life (which can be seen immensely similar to "the seven deadly sins" in Christianity and the other monotheistic religions) which is represented by the line blocking the conscious, unconscious, and dreamlike states of the self from attaining the point of absolute at the very top in the Om symbol (the Om is also a sacred incantation often repeated during meditation; the sound itself represents creation or the "a," manifestation or the "u" which is only formed through the "a" and "m" in which we as humans lie at in many different literal and metaphorical/metaphysical representations, and destruction or the "m" which is dualism yet again at play, a truly beautiful portrayal on the concept that encompasses essentially everything in our reality). The Om is also used within Hinduism; however, one thing Hindus do not recognize that Buddhists do is the Eightfold Path. The Eightfold Path involves knowing the truth or the Right View, controlling one's thoughts or Right Mindfulness, freeing your mind of evil or Right Intention, saying nothing to hurt another or Right Speech, working for the wellbeing of others or Right Action, respecting life or Right Livelihood, resisting evil or Right Effort, and practicing meditation / the harnessing of control over one's mind and inner peace or Right Concentration. Essentially, it is a moral compass (as well as taking on the shape of a literal compass with 8 separate points on the wheel); these moral concepts can be found as a 1:1 with many concepts in many of the teachings throughout every religion mentioned in this analysis. How wonderful is that!

After Buddhism, we will now touch upon Jainism. Jains follow similar codes in comparison to Hinduism and Buddhism, involving their own rendition similar to the Eightfold Path, the Three Jewels. The Three Jewels consist of Right Perception (very close to Buddhism's "Right View"), Right Knowledge (complete understanding of the elements of reality, which also involves Moksha, similar to Hinduism), and Right Conduct (specific codes, discipline, and vows one takes to achieve Kevala, or supreme wisdom / omniscience). It is known, as well, that these Three Jewels make up the "trinity," or the Ratnatraya. This is a direct similarity to Christianity's fundamental principle of the trinity as well, involving the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost/Spirit. The trinity in Jainism, however, is on the core moral principles of the religion instead of God; in Jainism, similar to Buddhism, there essentially is no known personal God to worship (instead, focusing on the spiritual awakening of oneself). This is where, of course, Jainism and Buddhism alike differentiate from monotheistic religions which focus heavily on one true God because there simply is no God in the religion. Jains also are viewed to be more hardcore than most other religious peoples, because one of their core principles is also "non-possessiveness." This lack of possession also extends to clothing, whereas many Jains can be found on only enough food to get by or no food at all, meditating naked in the wilderness (their fasting can be seen as a similarity to Islam's Ramahdan). Although some view it to be an archaic and insane action, I personally view to be a very powerful, artistic, metaphysical representation on the release of one's control and the primitive desire to own; in reality, even our own bodies we do not truly own, for we are but ontological parasites to these vessels of borrowed stardust, the actions of the vessel but not the vessel itself.

Finally, let us dive into Sikhism. Sikhs believe in a formless, omniscient, transcendent, forever-ineffable God; hence, it is also believed we will never come close to truly understanding the nature of such an entity. Going off of this, they believe that it only makes sense to ground everything you are and do in the now, right here in this world at this very moment. Sikhism is viewed to be a monotheistic religion, which of course directly correlates it to Christianity, Islam, and Judaism who all worship one God as well. Sikhism is based on Guru Nanak's fundamental moral teachings, which includes "God is One," rejecting the caste system / no discrimination, reject the five sins within the human body and mind, work honestly (not swindling others for riches, also shown in the Sikhism group's video shown during our class), taking care of the needy / sick, practicing selfless service, showing kindness and compassion, looking at the world in a positive light and with intrinsic purpose, standing against oppression, and respecting the rights of women. Many of these teachings were also brought up by Jesus, Muhammed, and Abraham, especially those regarding God's oneness, selfless action, rejecting sin, and taking care of the poor.

3.) In the light of my last links and ppt about the unique and modernist approach to religion of Teilhard de Chardin and Soren Kierkegaard, do you think that there will be a future for Religion, yes or no?

I believe religion and what it stands for is something that is forever entangled to us humans; guides towards a meaning that is likely forever outside of our own comprehension. Kierkegaard has an eloquent take on this with his three spheres of existence, the aesthetic sphere (someone who lives just day-to-day, perhaps nihilist, believing there is no true meaning in anything), the ethical sphere (rights and wrongs, good and evil), and the religious sphere (a higher power beyond words, beyond good and evil, a connection to "God" which may be different for different people, since Kierkegaard believes that each religion/path one follows is unique to the individual as a person). I think people will continue to search for this higher power, building on, staying with, or diverging entirely from past religions in their own, unique, subjective way. Religious symbols, such as the ouroboros, have been around for thousands and thousands of years, written on the walls of some ancient caves; the search for a meaning beyond our senses is something that's built into our foundations, thousands of years before and likely thousands of years more. Like Kierkegaard, however, I too see the ongoing issue of false-faithhood / authenticity of religions such as Christianity where it has become a business to many nowadays, a far-cry from the true, original teachings of Jesus Christ. Tying in race with religion is abhorrent as well; Christ likely was actually of darker skin being born in the Middle East / near the equator (as this is just how biology works) and not the blue-eyed, caucasian Jesus seen today in the homes of many, yet if you were to bring the idea of such to some they would feel heavily offended despite the race not actually mattering at all: it should be entirely about the message of goodness, the true core, not any other construct or nonsense. However, I believe the core of religion will always survive through those who attempt to intentionally or unintentionally deface it, for just like the duality represented in so many religions, where there are people who falsely represent the religion, there will always be those who properly represent it as well (good and evil always at war, and in the middle is where we must try to meet, or beyond the binary system altogether, somewhere ineffable; where we stand is entirely our choice to make). Pierre Teilhard de Chardin's concept of the "noosphere" and the "omega point" astronomically resonate with me, as they put terms to ideas I've had for a couple or so years now. I believe that someday, it is possible for us all to "converge" into this so-called "omega point" in which, through our already present interconnectedness, we become all the more "one" and enlightened as the system in its entirety. It is something that fuels me with passion beyond words, and it is something I mentioned in my first paper in this class, my spiritual journey. I wish to "share" my enlightenment, that is, to spread the message on how beautiful our reality truly is, how wonderful it is that we're gifted perpetual ignorance, and that all has no point in not being fully honest with oneself and another, and that we all can find our own truths and peace through ourselves (no materialistic ownership needed). So, I believe religion will continue the way it has and not perish (even atheism can be seen as a form of religion, for it is one's own truth still), until we potentially, someday, reach that omega point, where the noosphere completely converges into a singularity of sorts (whether it be metaphorically represented as such, or literally through our minds taking on digital forms, I simply cannot say at all right now). To be in the moment, to be a finite being, too, is one of the greatest gifts ever; thus, it only truly makes sense for there to be an end to the story, the end to the cycle, such as is for moksha/enlightenment/heaven, for us all to become one in the end, one way or another, or perhaps in no way, or in every way ever.

How wonderfully beautiful it is to be. Something I am ineffably grateful for.

Thank you for a fantastic semester, Professor! And for furthering my progression along my spiritual journey! You're awesome, and I heavily respect you for everything!

Have a great winter! :)

"Buddha is your own true nature, how can it be limited to gender?" - further relates to why I believe it only makes sense why I view myself as genderfluid, now trying to explore the feminine side of myself, and one day will have experienced both so I may relate to as many people as possible regardless of gender and after I explore the world and indulge in as many cultures as I can. I will broaden my view even further. At my core, I am without gender; we all are. We cannot decide the external appearance of ourselves, but the internal has always been genderless; merely, it tends to be masked to fit the social narrative, but this won't lead you towards serenity, you must balance between all “genders,” be all and none, none by being all, all by being none, superposition.

"The question has two parts. Why only one Buddha? This is only in the Theravāda. In other Buddhist schools two, five, or up to millions of Buddhas can be seen. Two in the White Lotus, Five in the five Buddha Maṇḍala (featuring Vairocana Tathāgata, Akṣobhya Tathāgata, Ratnasambhava Tathāgata, Amitābha Tathāgata, and Amoghasiddhi Tathāgata), and an infinite number in the Avatamsaka Sūtra. Most non-Theravādin schools accept the existence of multiple Buddhists."

"Five Buddha Maṇḍala painted by Dharmacārī Āloka The second part is why ethnically North Indian? Artists in different countries tend to depict the Buddha as having features similar to their own ethnic group, and besides have nationally distinctive styles, so one can usually tell say a Khmer Buddha from a Chinese, or a Tibetan. Many of the Buddhist artists (the image is by my colleague Dharmacārī Āloka) I know paint the Buddha as similar to themselves - since most of the artists I know are English or Kiwis, their paintings tend to look Anglo-Saxon. But there's nothing to stop, say someone of African descent portraying the Buddha as African."

"And of course there is some cross over. So Khmer artists tend to portray solitary Buddhas but with Khmer features, whereas Tibetans portray many Buddhas with Tibetan features. For some artists it makes sense to portray Gautama Buddha as an Indian because it seems more historically authentic, though of course we do not know the ethnic identity of Buddha - it's possible the Śākyas originally came from Iran for example."

"So one finds now at this stage, the Ideal Buddha divided into two figures, one male, one female, inseparably united. And these two figures thus united are sometimes symbolised by the Vajra, or Dorje, and the Lotus. Or by the Vajra, or Dorje, and the Bell. But we've not yet reached the end of the development. Not only does the Archetypal Buddha divide in this way, into two figures, male, female, sexually united, but all the other four Buddhas similarly divide. So now we've got not just five Buddhas, but ten Buddhas. We've got five so-called male Buddhas, and five so-called female Buddhas, and the female Buddhas are regarded as the consorts of the male Buddhas. As spiritually united with them. So now a few words about each of these so-called female Buddhas in turn. After that we'll just refer to the final development in this five-fold, or now ten-fold symbolic pattern, and then conclude."

"The first of the female Buddhas is Akashadatesvari. She is the consort of Vairocana, the white Buddha, the Buddha of the centre. Akashadatesvari. And her name means, 'The Sovereign Lady of the Sphere of Infinite Space.' We recollect that Vairocana himself is the Sun, the 'Sun Buddha', he's the Sun of the Whole Cosmos, the whole spiritual cosmos. He's radiating light, radiating heat in all directions. The light of Wisdom, the heat of Love. And Akashadatesvari, the Lady, the Sovereign Lady of the Sphere of Infinite Space, she represents, she embodies the infinite space through which the rays of the light of Vairocana fall. She represents unlimited spiritual receptivity. Or she represents the whole of the phenomenal world, the whole of the phenomenal universe, as pervaded, completely pervaded, absolutely pervaded, by the influence, by the influence if you like of the Absolute. In the language of 'The Awakening of Faith' she represents the whole of phenomenal existence as thoroughly perfumed by the Absolute. And like Vairocana, Akashadatesvari is white in colour. And she's represented in Dakini form. That is to say she's represented with loose flowing garments, and long dishevelled hair."

"Secondly, Locana. Locana is the consort of Aksobhya, the deep blue Buddha, the Buddha of the East. And her name means 'The Clear Visioned One'. Or literally, 'The One with an Eye.' In Tibetan her name is translated as 'Lady of the Bigger Eye,' or 'Lady Possessing the Bigger Eye.' And Locana, 'The One with the Eye', is the embodiment of clear awareness. She represents, or she embodies, pure simple direct awareness of things. And Aksobhya whose consort she is, Aksobhya is especially connected with Transcendental Wisdom. He's practically the only Buddha who appears in the Sutra of Transcendental Wisdom, especially the one in eight-thousand lines; and what does this association suggest? It suggests, - there's no wisdom without Awareness. No Awareness without Wisdom. The two are inseparably connected. In a sense are different aspects of the same spiritual experience. And Locana is light blue in colour."

"And then thirdly, Mamaki. Mamaki is the consort of Ratnasambhava, the yellow Buddha, the Buddha of the South. And her name means, 'Mine Maker.' She's the one who makes everything 'Mine', not in of course, a selfish egoistic sense, as one is now on the level of Enlightenment; makes everything her own. Mamaki is that spiritual attitude that regards everything, everyone, as mine, my own. In the sense of my VERY own. Near and dear to me. Precious to me. Valuable to me. So Mamaki actually experiences everybody as it were, enjoys everybody. Delights in everybody. Rejoices in everybody. Even, one might say, regards everybody as her own self. Sees no difference between herself and others. They're all mine. Or even 'me'. And her colour is yellow."

"Fourthly, Pandaravasini. Pandaravasini is the consort of Amitabha, the red Buddha, the Buddha of the West. And her name means 'The White Robed One.' It suggest one who is as it were, vested in purity. Even, insulated by purity. And the imagery here recalls that, which is connected with, the fourth Dhyana, the fourth state of meditation. Or higher consciousness. You may remember that the Buddha symbolised this by saying that one's experience in this Dhyana, this state of higher consciousness, was like that of a man who on a hot day, for he was tired and dusty, had taken a bath. And after taking a bath. And after taking a bath, of course not under a tap, or in a bathroom, but in a beautiful pond, full of lotuses, after taking this bath, had come out and wrapped himself in a pure white sheet. So this wrapping in a pure white sheet, in the white robe, represents as it were the concentration and gradual accumulation of one's energies, especially emotional energies, one's insulation of them from possibly harmful outside influences. So Pandaravasini is the White Robed One. The one isolated, insulated, from outside influences. And she's light red in colour."

"And fifthly and lastly we come to Tara. Tara is the consort of Amoghasiddhi. The deep green Buddha, the Buddha of the North. And her name means, 'The One who Ferries Across.' Ferries across the river, ferries across the river of birth and death, river of Samsara. And she recalls, in her function, the Buddha's 'parable of the raft'. When the Buddha said the teaching, the Dharma, is like a raft. It's to help you to get across. Across the river of Birth and Death. The name Tara is often translated as 'Saviouress', but this can be rather misleading, we may say that Tara represents the attitude of helping people to help themselves. So these are the five so-called female Buddhas. Akashadatesvari - The Sovereign Lady of the Sphere of Infinite Space, Locana - the One with the Eye, Mamaki, the Min-Maker, Pandaravasini, the White Robed One, and Tara, the Helper, the One Who Ferries Across. And these five female Buddhas, together with their male counterparts, represent different aspects of the one integral Enlightenment experience. An experience which is essentially, in its depths, in its essence, an experience of the inseparable two-in-one-ness of Wisdom and Love."

"We come now to the final development in the symbolic pattern with which we're concerned tonight. A development which has been anticipated to a limited extent in one at least of the previous lectures. We described the five male Buddhas, described the five female Buddhas, but they've been described, all of them, in just one particular way. Under one particular aspect. We've described them all, male and female Buddhas alike, under their peaceful aspect. But this is just one aspect. As I mentioned last week, in the esoteric Tantras, the Buddhas and Bodhisattvas appear under a double aspect. Under two aspects. There's a peaceful aspect, and there's a wrathful aspect. So this applies to the five Buddhas too. To the five male Buddhas, and the five female Buddhas. So I'm going to say a few words about them in their wrathful form and then conclude."

"These wrathful forms are much less highly individualised than the peaceful forms."

"And in their wrathful forms, the five Buddhas are known as, 'The Five Herukas.' That is to say that the five male Buddhas are known as 'The Five Herukas.' And they're all named after their respective Buddha families. There's the Buddha Heruka, the Vajra Heruka, the Ratna Heruka, the Padma Heruka, and the Karma Heruka. And each one is represented as strongly, powerfully, even massively built, represented as naked, except for a tiger skin or an elephant hide, and they all wear garlands of human skulls. And round their bodies and round their arms are twined snakes." "They usually possess at least six arms, sometimes very many more. And each has three eyes. Three bulging enflamed eyes. And each has a wrathful expression. And they're usually represented as trampling on their foes. The enemies of the Dharma. And as moving violently to the right. And they're surrounded each one, by a halo of flames. The Buddha Heruka is dark blue in colour, or black. The others are blue, yellow, red and green respectively. Now the consort of the Buddha Heruka, the equivalent female Buddha is known simply as Crodeshvari, which may be translated as 'Our Lady of Wrath.' And the consorts of the other Herukas are also named after their respective Buddha families. So one has the Vajra Lady of Wrath, the Jewel Lady of Wrath, the Lotus Lady of Wrath, the Action Lady of Wrath, all depicted in the same kind of way. They're all depicted naked, or practically naked, of the same colour as their consort, but lighter, and as somewhat smaller in size. And in each case they cling on to the front of their consort. Sometimes with their arms clasped round his neck."

"Such then we may say, is the symbolism of the Five Buddhas, the male and the female, the peaceful and the wrathful. Such, one of the most important, one of the most beautiful and meaningful patterns in the whole range of the Tantra; a pattern that organises part at least, of the riches of the Tantra into a form that we can appreciate and perhaps assimilate. And in the midst of all these forms, while envisaging, even visualising these forms, we must never forget that all of them, whether male or female, peaceful or wrathful, all of these symbols represent different aspects of the Enlightenment experience. Different aspects of Buddhahood. Must never forget that they all embody spiritual experiences, are the product indeed of spiritual experiences. If we remember this, that these symbols embody spiritual experiences, then perhaps we shall be able to respond to them, if we respond to them we shall be helped by them. We shall be helped in fact, we may say, by all the creative symbols of the Tantric Path to Enlightenment."

Keep going and you'll find what you're looking for

You won't find answers, but you'll find understanding

That there isn't one solid answer, that answers are only answers if you let them be, an understanding and acceptance that although we all may be forever ignorant (which is what makes us human to begin with and is the greatest gift of all bc it's the one thing God/the origin/where everything stems from cannot experience, and what also allows us to forever have another step to climb - the myth of sisyphus is the dance our species has played out since our creation, and will continue to do so, but itself is so fantastically tragic it's beautiful; art, woven to be perfectly imperfect) and although the past is but a reminder, the future a blurry dream, right now we can enjoy and bask in, while its seconds few, but few those seconds, and an ineffable, infinite value of each is born through that inevitable death, an experience held only once and never to be experienced the same again; remembered forever in history even when no one is left to remember.

- something I wrote up on the fly and sent just now to a friend who is beginning to sit and think towards that "big unknown" over Instagram, 8/1/2023 @2:50am

I write these posts to store my ghost.

To get out there small phrases that attempt to echo the millions in my mind, to possibly give someone out there a bit of comfort, guidance, relation, love for the world in spite of the ever-growing hatred, greed, and deception.

Maybe one person will see this.
Maybe three, or four.
Maybe someday, somehow, more than I can anticipate.

But I write these not for numbers, or for my name in a book, but for good, a good beyond good and evil itself, I like to think, and perhaps to continue beyond my expiration.

Worth a shot, right? :)

- H, a post I wrote on my YouTube channel @ 3am 8/1/2023

With knowledge comes sorrow.

Does that mean God can be “happy” if he already knows everything?

Is happiness merely a human term? Most likely.

Is “happiness” different for God? Most likely.

Does God purposely make himself forget or unaware of certain things so that he may too seek a higher purpose?

Is there such a thing as a higher purpose than the highest purpose? When does it end?

Is there a limit that all things eventually meet when it comes to seeking higher knowledge?

If there is infinite knowledge, is there such a thing as infinite sorrow? Well, obviously we as humans combat this sorrow with hope. We resort to wishing, praying, and hoping when faced with the unknown. It's the only thing we can do. It's what we've always done and always will do, when conflicted with the unknown. We are simple creatures, yet we see complexity in ourselves. Behind the screen, we are nothing more than yet another machine. Cells to one big organism. Pieces to a puzzle. Ants in a colony. We feed off social interaction and are stronger together than apart, "two brains are better than one" after all. 7 billion brains for that matter. Together, we act as though a computer. We're interconnected. A network. However, with our humanity, comes mistakes. Faults. Imperfections. Malfunctions in the system.

Touching back on the concept of sorrowful knowledge, it can easily be pieced together that, although we may live in a simulation, and that there most likely is multiple layers to our "reality" as we see it and are unaware of, why not just enjoy what we have laid before us? Well, obviously, the humans we are will always strive to reach a higher level in it all. We crave power. Strength. Purpose. But alongside it all, enjoying life for what it is, and potentially giving in to our simplicity, is truly all we really can do about everything. No matter how high we reach, there will always be another level to it all. And once we reach the top - if even possible to begin with - then what? We'll just have to enjoy what we have, which is something we can do right now. We've been put here for a reason, and maybe that reason is to be a simulation for the entity behind the screen; play a part in calculating for them, mocking their reality, so that they may predict their volatility too. But our true reason for existing in the first place, our true purpose, as I believe it, is to enjoy what God cannot: ignorance.

- 12/2/2020

With infinite paradoxes, we will never reach the top. We will always have another step to go. Another mountain to climb. We will always have a purpose. We will always find more meaning out of the endless nothing. Out of simplicity comes complexity. Out of perception comes reality. Out of nothing comes everything.

- 12/16/2020

Pain is a gift. Death is a gift. It grants mortality, which in of itself is the greatest gift of all. Like ignorance, it is something God cannot truly experience like we do. God does not have closure, either. He’s a singularity. Forever in an instant. Endless.

Simplicity comes with understanding. When humans understand something, it becomes simple to them. Things are only complex to us when we don’t fully understand them.

-12/18/20

I wish to learn how to do and do everything I possibly can and gain as much knowledge as possible and yet, it might be entirely fruitless, but at the same time, not pointless at all, because I exist and am here to perceive these things and make something from nothing, my form of reality only exists because I perceive it in the ways that I do, without my presence, the story told from beyond these eyes never would’ve existed.

Beachside paradise

A simple breeze

Breathe in

Breathe out

Wake up

It's 10 past 7

Stayed up late again I see?

Look in the mirror

Minutes are seconds

Breathe in

Breathe out

Get ready, it's time to spectate

Watch yourself walk through the door

Drive to work, talk with friends, it's all the same

Keep going, you've gotta last longer, right?

Move your feet, you can only go forward

Previous locations fill the rear view mirror

Go, go, go

Keep going

You'll find your peace one day - your mind if you're lucky

Breathe in

Breathe out

Breathe

Breathe

Please breathe

I can't

Where

Where did everybody go

Where are my friends

Where am I

Where am I

Where

When

When did I lose myself

When did I lose it all

When did I lose

When did I lose

When did I lose

Why

Why am I here

Why am I hurt

Who hurt me, me - who?

Why

Why, why why why

How

How am I hurt

How do I feel

How should I feel

How does this all work

I’m not sure

And I’m not sure you’re sure either

I’m dying, dy-ing

no, I’m drowning

Swim, but I can’t breathe

Breathe, but there’s no air

Breathe

The date is November 10, 2020, the time is 3:37 AM, I’m currently writing this out of complete boredom, but, to clear my mind I need to put words down. Nearly 2 years ago on August 18, 2018 during my fifth period World history class with Mr. Jenkins I had an overwhelming pain come upon me, it was unlike any other pain I've ever felt before in my entire life. It felt like I was going to have a heart attack at any given second. I couldn't feel myself think. I was sent to the nurses office and she put it off as just low blood sugar but little did I know from that day forward, even after countless doctors appointments and visits, I would suffer for every passing day due to a condition known as new daily persistent headache and not once would I ever feel normal again. New daily persistent headache restricts me from doing normal task the people of you is easy and a lot of people would have muscle memory for I previously had muscle memory for all sorts of these types of things but things to NDPH, writing and typing are now seemingly difficult tasks seen before me. Whenever I go to type right forming sentences in my head is a difficult task as normally I'll come to think of the following word in the sentence and I'll just become a blur in my mind you're subconsciously occurred to me what the word is but I'll never be able to make it out consciously so I was struggling struggling until I come up with another word think of it as constant memory fog in writing with writing I'll go to write a word that I'm thinking of and I'll picture of the whole sentence I want in my mind and I’ll wind up writing the word after the next word instead of the following word in the sentence.

I suffer every single day from this condition every time I go to sleep every time I wake up no matter how many times I prayer wish for it to go away it’s still follows me and lingers over me like an overarching shadow a wait constantly pushing me down and pulling me down with every passing second and not once doesn’t let up

I’m currently using voice to message on my phone right now to write all of this as I don’t want to even attempt to formulate sentences as I attempt to write this so instead I’m just speaking all of this out and possibly I’ll do something with it later

This condition as you can guess sucks every bit of motivation I can possibly gain out of anything I ever do for the most part it makes it very difficult to find any sort of motivation to do anything as knowing and believing that I have this disadvantage disability this handicap no matter where I go just makes it hard to see through it

I’d like to write a book on the experiences I’ve had the feeling that bad in the trauma and suffering I’ve had to Indore that to seems like a difficult task with my lack of motivation due to this condition I currently withhold

I’d like to also write a book on all the theories and different ideas I have and potentially name it the complexity of simplicity

I’m not sure if these words will ever go to use Ralph and leave and see these again in the near future and since the voice command to message tours a little bit ridiculous he’ll be hard to make out most of these words anyways

However I’m sure I’ll be able to figure out what I’ve said and if I don’t oh well

I spent a lot of nights like these thinking these words out of my head I don’t typically say it out loud but here I am

Possibly I could use this is some sort of template if I were to write a book well if that’s the case then maybe I can work out a bit of a order now at the time

Well for starters I’d like to discuss my theories on God and religion within my book and how religion is a long game of telephone created by humanity where as humans and living creatures are indirectly or directly created by God so if you were define God it would be best to take a look at yourself and find your own unique path towards God rather than looking out towards materialistic things created by imperfect humans

God as we know is a perfect being he knows everything on top of this he created everything and since God created everything including time he doesn’t abide by time actually rather he’s a singularity cross all time and space space time even is a singularity cross the past present and future this means that God also knows everything we will ever do God knew everything that has happened and will happen before it’s never happened before the universe was that even created God has known everything he knows exactly everything that will ever happen in the universe and he’s known this since the dawn of his creation that done for creation of everything

Also the Devil in the idea of demons is merely created by humans as a way of describing the natural greed and hatred of humanity and put it in actuality it’s more for personification of it to put in terms that’s honestly what religion does for the most part regardless

When people ask and see the humans need to ask God for forgiveness for their sins it’s honestly quite silly because there’s no need for God to forgive you because he already knew you were going to do those things and he created you knowing that you would do that everybody has their own set path and we all have our own destinies and regardless of what we do we will follow the path God has laid before is perfectly whether we like it or not because no matter what we do we honestly don’t really have free will will the debate of free will is up for grabs but we truly don’t know if we have free will or not but most likely in then we know this for a fact God has said a path before us we don’t have a destiny so really we don’t really have any free will to begin with

Anything we ever will do or have done has already been forgiven by God long before the creation of the universe

Also most likely going off the topic of religion God most likely we all live inside of a simulation of some sort because with multiple possibilities including our universe and our current reality we’re already beginning to simulate reality if we can get to the point where we create realistic guy and maybe that’s all we are as well we’re just out and like because it will be a simulation within a simulation with an a simulation and so forth and the same thing goes with the universe being within the universe within the universe and with God God to be created by another guy by another guy but I can’t buy another God in which I personally worship and believe that I know that I have a connection with is the God above it all going to start at all the grass will be on top of that with the different chains of God’s been created by other gods another God could be creating the entire infinite chain of gods selves and so forth God’s creating infinite chains of gods of gods well another God creates the infinite chain of infinite God creating infinite chains of God increase infinitely creating infinite universe is of universe is with infinite simulations of simulations

In my book I also would like to have a section dedicated to my family and all those who have helped me throughout my life and most importantly about my mom who passed away about a month ago and how brave and how selfless and how caring she was three others

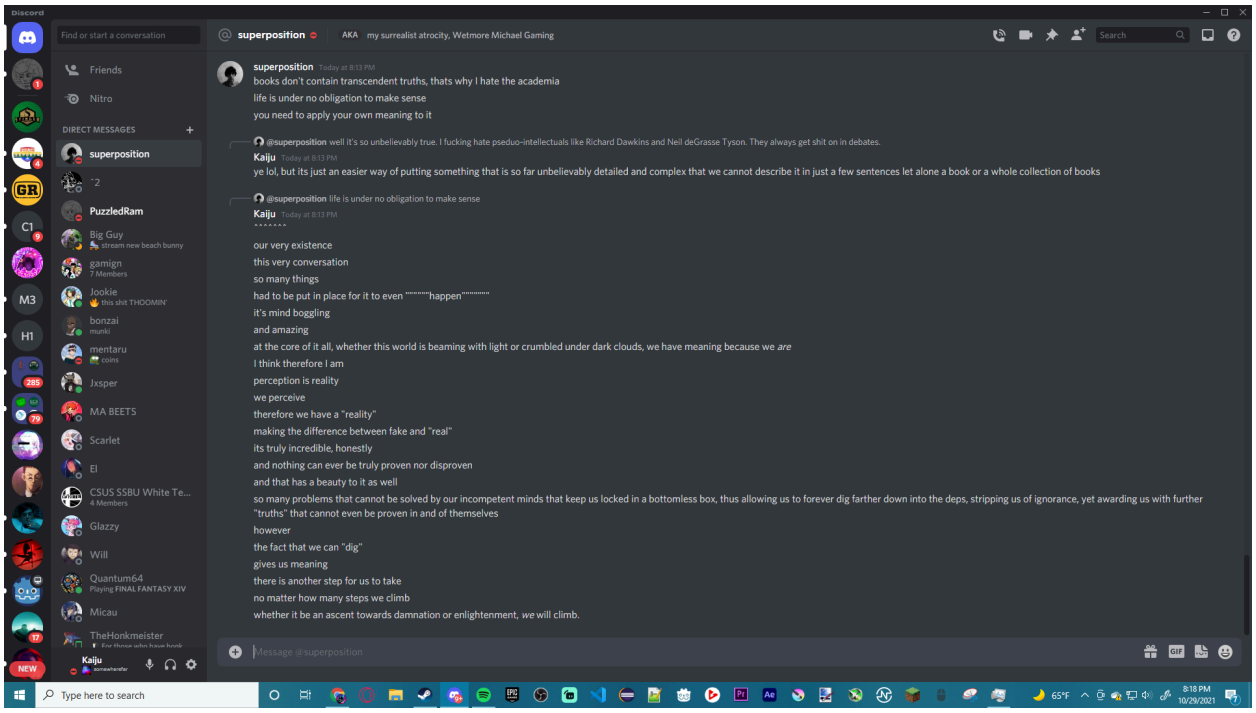
Another thing I would like to talk about in my book is hell no matter what we do it is cut or we can always be considered selfish in someway even spending money and sending share money off the charity can be considered selfish as your indirectly doing it as a direct result of your biologically infused reward system that makes you happy knowing you did a good deed

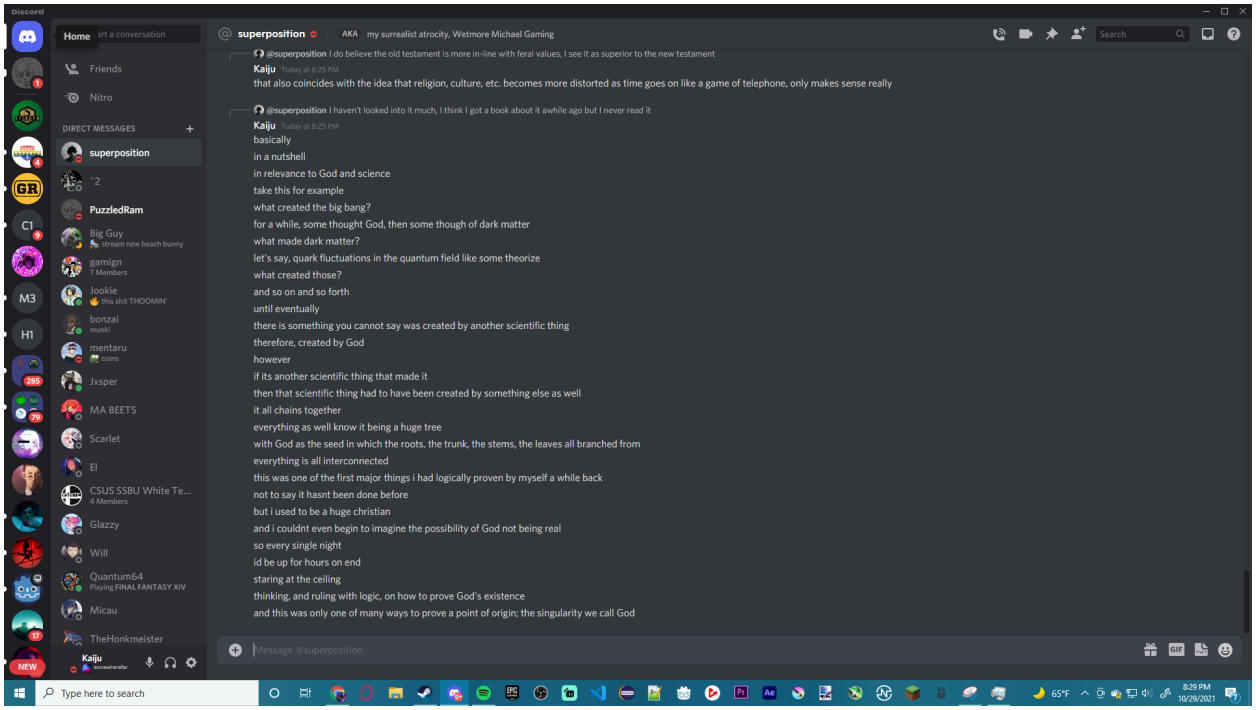
one of the few ways I see being truly selfish in one way is love because if you can put that if you can think of that person as a part of yourself doing things for them although it may be obviously triggering your reward system in your brain with dopamine and such it also would be in a way apart of yourself meaning what you're doing is selfish for another person but since they're a different person they're not actually a part of you it's truly selfish instead

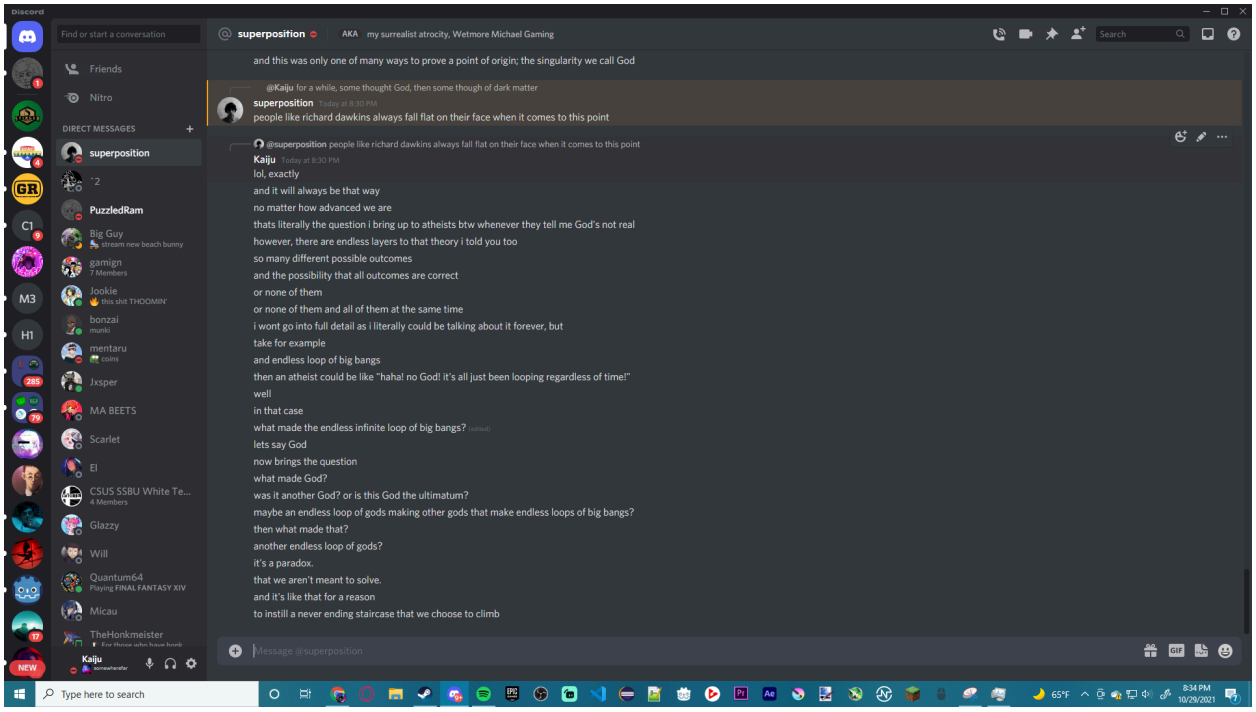
I've been keeping all sorts of logs and diaries in different pieces of information scattered about throughout my Google drive and Google docs in the notes and reminders but I think I might begin to start using this document more often and just speak what's on my mind and let it ride out on the document and potentially I can go back and polishing actually write things instead of just doing voice to text

Hopefully I'll be able to make out what I'm actually saying because voice to text honestly sucks

Well I don't have anything else in my mind at the moment so I think it's best to go to sleep it's currently 4 AM and I've got to school in three hours from now so I guess I'll see you later goodbye and good night







The Key to True Selflessness

(A response I wrote in a Discord DM lol)

By Hunter Brown, 9/30/2020 10:30PM

Everything humans do no matter what is selfish. It’s merely just part of our nature. We come into this world with nothing but ourselves and in our nature is the desire to survive and do whatever it takes to stay alive. We're constantly looking out for our own self interest, and even things like let's say if you were to give to charity for no benefits for yourself whatsoever it's still selfish because whether you realize it or not, your brain did it because its wired to think that that's a good deed you did, thus rewarding your brain with dopamine and happiness that you accomplished a good thing, literally everything we do is selfish and relationships are no different, however, if you were to have a 2 sided relationship where both persons think of one another as an extension of themselves, then anything that your brain is wired to do selfishly such as holding their hand or killing yourself to save them in some sort of scenario and whatnot intentionally wanting to make that other person feel better or saving them while still doing it unintentionally to make yourself feel better, it's technically selfless because you're doing a selfish action for "yourself" as in the other person whom isn't truly a physical part of you but rather a whole other being entirely, and if that other person is willing to do the same for you then it creates a never ending cycle.

Thus, with true relationships comes romance, with romance comes love, with love comes selflessness. And that is the only way to break the wired in selfish cycle of humankind - a paradox rather - is with yet another paradox. That's how our universe works as a whole, really. It's all just a bunch of paradoxes with more paradoxes as solutions.

We all say we're perfectly imperfect, but in the eyes of the Lord, what are the standards for perfection? We obviously have our own standards for what is and isn't perfect, but what if all of this is perfect after all? Since God doesn't abide by time since he created time itself and wouldn't make a rule for himself to stand by, he knows what our whole life will be like before we're even born. Even before the universe was made. And since everything plans out the way God wanted it, does that mean it's perfect? Honestly, I think it is. In our eyes, probably not, but in the Lord's? I'd say almost definitely.

We are all loving souls put into selfish bodies.

7/31/20

(Response in discord once again lol)

Pedophiles are just people who’s brains were developed in the wrong way as a child, I don’t believe they should be beaten, I believe they should they should seek a psychologist and get the right treatment to either lower their desire for children or completely eliminate their preference as a whole, liking children is merely a fetish, a desire, but that doesn’t mean it’s moral or right to do, some people will argue that it’s just like a guy liking a guy, or a girl liking a girl, that is just another sexual preference, when in reality it’s not, it’s a sexual desire. A distorted, immoral desire. It can be related to other immoral desires including a certain fetish where people find pleasure in killing others, or even having sex with dead bodies. So when people say fetishes are harmless, theyre fucking wrong. Dead wrong. Pedophilia is not a sexual preference, a preference is when you’re drawn towards a specific gender, and sorry to break it to ya, but CHILD is not a fucking gender.

I feel hopeless every single second of my life, the only thing that even begins to give me hope is the thought of being with my special someone, but I'm always reminded that no matter what, I will never deserve someone as amazing as that person, they're better off with anybody else, most days I want to cry but I physically am disabled from doing so, I also am stuck going in and out of psychosis weekly to the point where some days I just don't see a reason in it all, God is the only person who can truly love me fully, and here on Earth the Lord is with me, but I am not with him. Nowadays, I spend a lot of time wondering if I did it, and dreaming of just how magical it'd be to spend an eternity in the arms of my creator, but of course, I never can gain the courage to do so. Selfishness, and selflessness are keeping me anchored to this soil. If I leave, that's selfish, as people will miss me. People missing me is selfish of them, and me not leaving because of it is selfless. If I were to leave, it'd be completely selfish of myself. No matter what way you turn it, the world is fueled by selfishness, that of which can only be counteracted with selflessness, which is secretly selfishness in disguise. You don't want to make people feel bad by leaving, so you call that selfishness, when in reality, you are being selfish. You don't want to be the one who abandons everyone.

I can’t help but wonder Lord, are we nothing more than meat and bones, driven by perversion and the lust to fill in the gaps voided by ignorance?

You know what’s awesome? Trying your hardest to love someone and make them feel appreciated while in the meantime they’re cheating on you. I’m going to flat out say this: Ty is the biggest piece of shit I’ve ever met. He may seem nice, but I’ve never been so fucking used nor abused in my fucking life. As soon as we got together he wanted to meet up so I could take him to a movie and I could suck his fucking cock. Second date, I decided to use some of my measly fucking $50 to my name to buy a gift card so I could gift him steam games and shit

but instead he wanted me to just give him the code so he could spend it on league n shit. Third date, I spent $50 on sushi and he didn’t even care to offer any money at all. Fourth date, he fucking stole from the target we went into, a fucking whistle and he lied about it too, and out of all our fucking dates the only thing he wanted was either fucking sex or money. And that’s just shit from dates, that’s not even talking about all the other bs. He also lied to me about being a fucking virgin just so I’d have sex with him, I cannot express how fucking used I feel daily and how much I regret even fucking meeting the mother fucker

I feel so pathetically lonely. And yes, I know I’ll always have God by my side, but I can’t wrap my arms around him and tell him I love him. I just want somebody to hold. To kiss. To love.

Dear reader, after reading my messages and taking a peak into my fears, hopes, and dreams, please try to find that in yourself as well. Recognizing who you are will only lead to benefits, it's hard to be someone in this world when that someone is lost in themself.

It's so stupid how I'll jot down these notes and they'll go from "oh haha look at me I know about the universe" to just being full on pathetic. It's honestly cringey as fuck but it doesn't even matter because nobody will see these notes other than myself. Then who am I writing these to? You, the reader. If you're reading this, then that makes you the targeted audience, you should feel special. I'm writing these notes without the intention of anyone seeing them, yet I simultaneously hope that somebody will find them at the same time. I guess that changes the overall intention, huh?

Although I may only see clearly for tonight, these moments are enough for me to see through it all. I have been given a purpose. I may never find out what that purpose is, but it is a purpose nonetheless. For that Lord, I am grateful. I will cherish these few moments and bathe in your joy, for you have given me meaning.

Hunter Brown, a person with meaning.

- 11/30/19

Humans are selfish creatures. Anything and everything we do can be, in some way, considered selfish. Anything anything does can be considered selfish. But not all intentions can be considered selfish. The mind, emotion, the body, physical needs, but with the soul comes intention and will. Your mind could be saying you're sad, and that nobody loves you, and that you should just die, your body says you're tired, making the agonizing feeling of overwhelming dread evermore crippling, but your soul is what keeps you going. The soul is what makes the difference. The soul resists all odds, no matter what the body tells you to think or do. We are more than mindless savages. Our souls give us control, even when everything leads us to believe that we are not. We, my friend, are more than ourselves lead us to believe. If we only had our mind and our body, which were both made to be selfish and be beneficial for your own survival, then people would never be willing to die for another person. Somebody could be truly happy and be in great shape and choose to kill them selves, as long as they had a strong enough will to do so. One of our purposes, I believe, is to see past what’s in front of us, what all leads us to believe, in a sense, that’s what faith is, where we learn to control the biology prison we were forced into unwillingly, and become more than ourselves.

When viewed, probability turns into reality based off scientific experiments where quarks do not exist until viewed. They never existed, until we made them exist. They existed, even for an instance, within our own minds. Because we saw them, they existed in some way, we saw them as if they were physical even though they never existed to begin with. It was also proven that larger molecules had similar actions when compared to quarks, they were able to be in two places at once, meaning practically anything at any scale could represent these actions. Including, the universe in its entirety. We are more than reality of itself, as reality as a whole is simply one big probability, and a probability cannot turn another probability into reality. We are more than a probability. We are more than reality. We make reality exist. We turn the Lords probability into reality. There is more than reality. We are more than reality. We are the tools of the Lord, and with this comes purpose.

My thoughts on the afterlife don’t really involve a physical Heaven. I think of Heaven more of a resting place for the soul, or maybe it’s like a lucid dream that lasts forever where whatever you think of will happen and maybe your family and friends will be there. But what I believe the most is what I call a “Heaven” is losing memory of your previous life and starting a new one, each life playing a key role in the history of the world, maybe even other worlds. You might wake up as a baby alien in your next life but you’d never know that you were a different species in your last life. Maybe you’ll wake up as a dog or a pet that helps a person get through tough times which makes that person go on to do even greater things. Knowing this, there is no need to fear death. Your soul will live on for all eternity. It will just keep being reused over and over again.

The butterfly effect controls our lives. Even if you think you are doing nothing for the world, secretly you are creating golden parts of history. Every life plays a key role in the world.

Or in this case
Their worlds.

(My thoughts on the afterlife have changed drastically since this time, now it relies more on becoming nothing or becoming one with God, becoming a singularity or quickly viewing over your entire lifetime in what feels like a while but is no time at all before you return to the endless void and rejoin the nothingness, or maybe you'll wake up from a simulation, I may talk about it in more depth in another entry down the line.)

Many people believe that there is a devil. But I believe that there is no such thing as a devil or hell. Here's why. If you were to commit a sin, as long as you can learn to forgive yourself or if someone can forgive you then God has to forgive you as it would show that you are better than God at something if you were to be able to Forgive but he couldn't, and that's not possible, God is perfect and is better than humans at everything, better at everything than everything. And if you were forgiven, then God would forgive you too, everyone will go to Heaven. And if everyone goes to Heaven then there is no need for a Hell. Therefore there is no need for a devil. And the demons, well, God isn’t going to throw anything at you that you can’t handle, that would just be unfair. And demons are to be known as corrupted souls, well, if everyone went to Heaven their soul would be at peace and in the hands of God. God would never make someone bad for all eternity. God has chosen paths for all of us. Some involve horrible crimes but this is just to test our forgiveness for others and for ourselves. God will always forgive us. We are imperfect for a reason.

There are many reasons to life. But forgiveness holds a special place in our lives. It connects us to God.

It makes us human.

Don’t cry for God knows what to do
As the farther we go, we’re still close

A bond that’s there but see-through

What it is, nobody knows

No tears, as God has our back

He knows our love for one another

Something that can never lack

Something that brings out the brightest color

Look up, as God is here

The constant shine of summer

He knows that we miss each other

Just know that God has a plan

For this love battles fronts

A battle against distance that seems to have just began

God will soon end it, just once

And on this day before we meet again

As that clock ticks half past ten

I wanted to wish you in the happiest way

A Happy Mother’s Day

I love you more than anything mom

My response in a DM, September 19, 2019: I'm definitely a believer of God and always will be, and Jesus as well because even if he wasn't made directly from God then the God at the top of it all willed for it to happen to technically it is directly from God himself, and I know Jesus May have never been born but that's where the faith part comes in and I do have faith in his existence, but I do agree with you, things like the Big Bang for example can't truly be 100% proven and even the past itself can't be proven by people who didn't live in that time period cause we don't even know if this is all a simulation and it was created and started at 1900 or something like that and programmed it to where we all believe there was a past by giving us history books and documents and planting that idea in peoples minds, honestly it's like a 50:50 chance were in a simulation but even THEN I STILL know God willed it all to happen because no matter how you look at it God is always on the top of everything: he made the simulators. Possibly, the simulators were made by other simulators, and so on. We can't prove that some of these chains end, but every single time this same pattern occurs we can prove the existence of a God who knows exactly what I'm going to type out in this message before I even finish typing it. It's honestly crazy how we can't comprehend God but we can prove his existence, pretty cool

(I will touch upon any changes in on my take on the concept down the line)

When I die, whoever’s reading this, I want to be green buried or have my own tree grow out of my remains, or I want to be cremated. I want my body’s materials to return to where they once came, thus completing the cycle.

I’m currently writing this at 12:19 AM on November 14th, 2020. On the 12th, I found out my mom secretly told my dad that I was gay, but turns out he’s completely chill with it, which honestly really surprised me. Regardless, I’m still very happy. That same day, I came out to all of my other friends whom didn't know about my sexuality already. They too were all very supportive, at least from what I can tell so far. Going off of this topic, I currently am listening to Cancelled by Born Without Bones on Spotify. I also just finished uploading a bunch of my GFX pieces and artworks to my google drive in case if anything were to happen to the original files (it’s always nice to have a backup for stuff lol).

I FEEL LIKE COMPLETE SHIT RN.

WOKE UP AT 7PM TODAY. HAD A HEADACHE ON TOP OF MY ALREADY EXISTING NDPH SO THAT WAS FUN. STILL HAVE IT TOO. GONNA TAKE MELATONIN SO I FORCE MYSELF TO SLEEP AT MIDNIGHT TONIGHT. RIP TO THE TIME I COULD’VE USED TO ACTUALLY DO SOMETHING TODAY. MAYBE COULD’VE GONE OUTSIDE INSTEAD OF BLASTING SPOTIFY THRU MY HEADPHONES IN MY ROOM ALONE THE WHOLE DAY WHILE PLAYING SHITTY GAMES I BARELY FIND ENTERTAINING WITH THE LITTLE MOTIVATION I HAVE TO DO SO.

PROB GONNA BE A RINSE AND REPEAT TYPE OF THING FOR THE REST OF THIS BREAK, JUST LIKE SUMMER BREAK, LOL. P.S: DON’T BOTHER TALKING TO ME ABOUT IT PLEASE, I JUST WANTED TO POST THIS TO VENT HOW FUCKING LIFELESS I’VE FELT AS OF LATELY. BEEN IN A DEPRESSION-INDUCED TYPE OF PSYCHOSIS FOR A WHILE NOW AND IT’LL PROB GO ON FOR QUITE SOME TIME TOO. OH WELL LOL, “CHEERS TO THE FALL.”

Been drowning in heartache and stress and so many other things that would take fucking ages to list, I’ve been having constant “thoughts” every single day and what feels like every single minute, and I know I don’t wanna do “it” but sometimes it feels like I really, really fucking want to. Been having dreams about my mom where she would say “why don’t you guys talk to me Or come visit me anymore” “it’s like you don’t care about me.” And it hurts more than ever, because she said those things plenty of times before in person. Reminds me of all the things I’ll never get to take back, never get to go back and change. And that’s only one of the many, many things they’ve completely deprived me of any motivation as of lately, hopefully I can go outside tomorrow and finally clear my head maybe, who knows, who cares even lol, and so p.s. once again, don’t talk to me about this. This is just to get my thoughts down into words.

(Originally typed up on 11/22/2020, posted to my close friends story, in which only 1 person replied)

Individuals to humankind as a whole as well as the universe in its entirety is nothing more than patterns and probability.

Chance is an illusion. Destiny controls us.

- 12/2/2020

With knowledge comes sorrow.

Does that mean God can be “happy” if he already knows everything?

Is happiness merely a human term?

Is “happiness” different for God?

Does God purposely make himself forget or unaware of certain things so that he may too seek a higher purpose?

Is there such a thing as a higher purpose than the highest purpose?

When does it end?

Is there a limit that all things eventually meet when it comes to seeker higher knowledge?

If there is infinite knowledge, is there such thing as infinite sorrow? Well, obviously we as humans combat this sorrow with hope. We resort to wishing, praying, and hoping when faced with the unknown. It’s the only thing we can do. It’s what we’ve always done and always will do, when conflicted with the unknown. We are simple creatures, yet we see complexity in ourselves. Behind the screen, were nothing more than yet another machine. Cells to one big organism. Pieces to one big puzzle. Ants in a colony. We feed off social interaction and are stronger together than apart, “two brains are better than one” after all. 7 billion brains for that matter. Together, we act as though a computer. We're interconnected. A network. However, with our humanity, comes mistakes. Malfunctions in the system.

- Discord conversation held on 12/22/20 between a friend and I.

For quite a bit now, I've been finding it hard to find words while I'm talking. I'll know what the word starts with and how long it kinda is pictured in my head, but I'll have to take a super long time to figure out which word it is or just use another word instead of just google what the word is I'm looking for and this happens what seems to be super frequent throughout the day. Also, whenever I'm talking about one subject and something takes away my attention for a split second, I'll forget completely about what I was talking about and have to either be reminded what I was talking about or take a super long time to figure it out myself. Also, while I'm talking I'll repeat myself often or feel like I've repeated myself and I'll reread over lines a ton while reading as well. I feel like this is an early stage of dementia at age 18, but i guess I'll find out haha.

- 1/31/21 @ 2:49AM

My love for birds is passionate. I have so many emotional ties to them it's unreal. I still vividly remember when I was 3 in my old house in Texas on the 1st floor facing the front door with the dinner table to my right and the staircase to my left where my grandma gave me this stuffed goldfinch whom I later named tweetie, and I still distinctly remember asking my mom "What is it" or "what is this" and I remember her telling me it was a bird. I'd loved it at first glance, so I guess you could say I loved birds before I even knew what they were haha. Tweetie was always my favorite stuffed animal back then and treated him like he was alive most of the time. My grandma gave me even more stuffed birds since she worked at a gift shop in Arkansas where they sold plenty of them and I loved every single one of them. I too remember vividly how I used to pray to God to make me a bird or reincarnate me as one; especially a bald eagle, raven, or American goldfinch - which tweetie was. I also remember having a nightmare one time that felt super real and took place in my house where these two “fairies” which looked like just normal people with fairy wings on and a magic wand with normal clothes on - a man and a woman - that kept cornering me in my own house in Serrano on the second floor near my room and there was this type of text that appeared saying “bird boy” and it felt like they were gonna turn me into a bird which kinda scared me since I didn’t want to just up and leave my family for good so from that day forth it kinda shook me and changed my prayers from “make me a bird, God” to “reincarnate me as a bird after I die, God” lol.

My whole childhood I had loved birds more than any other animal and still to this day and most likely always will. They were one of the few things that kept me happy and brought me joy in the darkest periods of my childhood: during the divorce, my mom’s drinking episodes, my parents arguing and yelling, etc. Birds make me exuberant just at the sight of them. I love them so much and if all goes well I hope to take care of a rescued one, give him the best, happiest life he possibly can have, and release him back into the wild if possible.

- 1/31/21 @ 3:01 AM

I am completely against the ideas of pets as a whole. Animals have survived perfectly fine out in the wild on their own for millions of years and don’t need humans to survive and reproduce and keep their species alive. Taking pets out of the wild or birthing them into a society where people will take them home and pretend like they’re their parents is blatantly wrong - only exception being taking in rescued animals and returning them back to the wild if they can be returned and survive in nature still. Hopefully society will be reshaped one day so that humanity may live alongside animals as friends back like the native Americans (my ancestors whom I'm proud to have descended from as they rightfully stuck to the proper morals when it came to nature and upheld and protected its fragility rather than abusing it for temporary gain) - how it should be, instead of the master + slave tactics we love so dearly in this day and age as a direct result of humankind's lust for power and purpose.

- 1/31/21 @ 3:08 AM

If these ideas were to spark anything major in the world (which odds say won't be the case but let's face it, anything is possible, probability doesn't mean anything if it's already predetermined) I wouldn't want it to be looked upon like a religion (since the path to The Peak of Paradox - God - is truly found internally by a creation of God rather than an imperfect framework to explain and simplify the insimplicatable), but rather a way to push them onto the right way of thinking - open mindedness and seeing things for the way they are rather than what you want to believe; ask yourself "Why?" to everything, just like Michael Stevens always says, and then ask yourself "Why?" to the answer to the previous "Why?" and so on and so forth until you can't do anything other than string it back to the origin.

- 1/31/21 @ 3:12 AM

I may go back later and delete my other entries where I complain or vent, because obviously they contradict with my current beliefs and thought process, but at the same time, I guess that gives you a sense of my change for the better; my evolution, my blooming, my strengthening, my branching.

- 1/31/21 @ 3:16 AM

It's most definitely possible that I may die before I even begin writing the first page to this book, but I have hopes someone may take off from where I left. And if not, everything happens for a reason. Maybe it's best that I'm not the one to assist the world in seeing through the woven seams of it all - because - after all - ignorance is a blessing, it's a gift, and yet somehow knowledge is a gift too. It's all a gift. Everything is a gift.

- 1/31/21 @ 3:19 AM

Life is full of guesses and is a guess in and of itself, so why not give it your best guess as to what it's really all about.

(potentially our whole purpose of being here to begin with) a year ago from now, i never wanted to die more in my entire life, and now, i want to do it all, i want to do everything, i want to help everyone, i want to make everything better and it's just time and knowledge that separates me from some of those opportunities right now lalalala la — Today at 9:40 AM

:mozzieyes:

(Me) — Today at 9:40 AM good thing the existence of hell doesn't make logical sense in terms of it all :troll~1:
cool thing God is logically proven tho :thumbsup:
although nothing is truly proven, at least with barebones logic that rules our reality and everything in it you can give it your best guess for everything really at the very least a point of singularity in which everything derives from and is the peak of knowledge and everything ever, we're essentially pieces of it - people tend to think God is some mf up in the clouds taking on a human form when in reality we will probably never even come close to truly grasping "him" on top of that in religion most especially ppl tend to worship the messengers, not the messages themselves jesus, the buddha, etc
it's about the message not the people

the people are great too, yes but their mission is the message and nowadays
we tend to be like "yeah i worship this guy" and then go against every damn ideology they tried to present to the world we missed the point entirely from what it seems just like how Egyptians did with pharaohs and i think its because we as a species want someone to look up to like that we want someone leading us we want them to make the difficult choices for us we want a guide to follow because we fear the unknown and it'll continue to be that way until we can accept the unknown, accept the fear within us, accept our foundations, accept it all we all naturally want a God we can sense we want a guide.
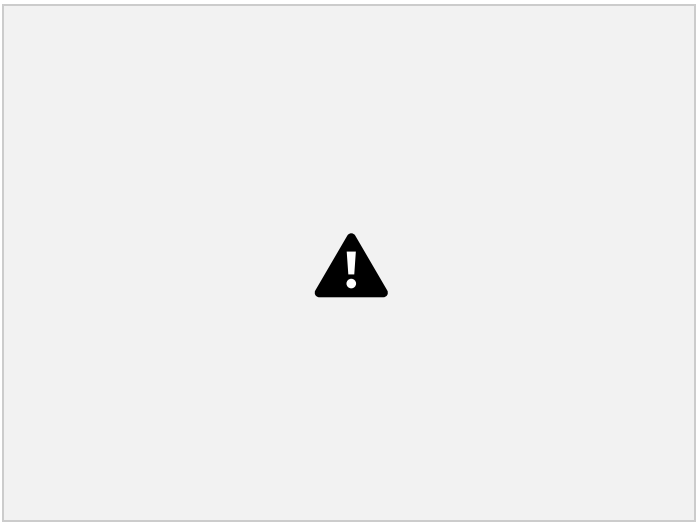
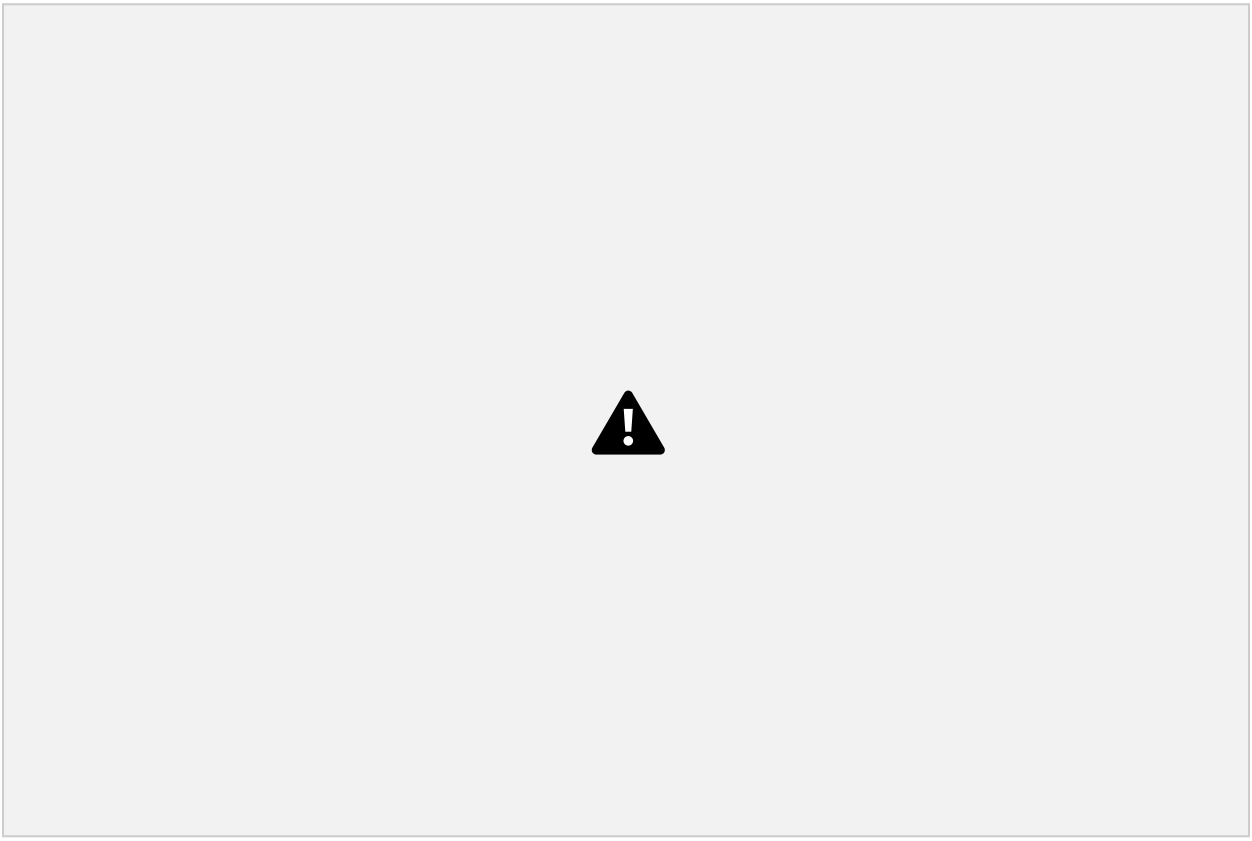
we want to know what to do, but the thing is, we dont really and we wont really, and that's okay.





notice anything? and NO, im not saying the buddha is the fucking devil

it's a religious, cultural archetype the concept of duality
it's both good, and bad, and that's the point of it. the two are necessary for the other to exist. "as above, so below" is a term that usually is viewed as satanic, but it's just the concept of duality in terms of heaven and hell, heaven and earth, you name it duality is all around us it's everywhere
it's inescapable
it's represented in pretty much every religion, in one way or another even vendanta philosophy; dvaita for example the separation between the Lord and man, everything and nothing, light and dark good and bad. and the same can be said for so many other archetypes as well, religions are extremely similar to one another because they all try to answer the same question with the same resources at hand - just perceived differently.

religion is humanity's attempt to grasp reality, to grasp "an ultimate motive" in life, to capture potentially the meaning of life itself. It is in no way perfect, for we are not perfect either. And just like how putting 1 person in a high position of power is considered malice, 1 imperfect ideology or moral compass leading the masses is destined for disaster.
This is why you should find God through yourself (a creation of God, or at the very least not by man), because in the end, your guess is probably just as good as the next person over.
go about it logically, and you will be able to give it your best guess. That's how i go about it, and everything in general.
it has never let me down.
the meaning of life, as i view it, is to choose its own meaning yourself. YOU choose what you want out of life. We all want someone to tell us what to want, but that's what we have ourselves for.
Countless things are entirely subjective, the concept "objective" itself might even be based in subjectivity on what is objective, we will always be followed by bias but we must try our best to minimize it as much as possible in order to give it our best guess at what is objectively the best overall.
I believe in God and I love him and his work and his incredible architecture (I say "his" lightly because he has no need for gender since we just refer to him like that bc thats how our language is structured; God doesnt need a gender bc the biological purpose of it is for reproduction, and God is not mortal nor likely abided by time itself.), HOWEVER, I do not look to him every time I need an answer. I know I will not get a response, and it's for the better that way. If there is a problem in life, it is okay not to know what to do. We want that guide because we fear not knowing what to do. We fear the unknown. We fear fear. But we need to accept the unknown if we TRULY want to get going and solve some problems that need solving.
We put ourselves in this dilemma, and I believe we as a species can get ourselves out of it.

if you commit yourself entirely to one political party and confirmation bias ur way all the way thru you're just as bad as the people who follow religion like it's a cult and some perfect how-to guide

if not probably much worse

it's called letting others think for you its the pinnacle of bias

there shouldnt be sides to politics to begin with its the illusion of us versus them even tho there are countless sides when it comes to politics

what's right and wrong, believe it or not, is pretty damn subjective based on the person

same goes for politics

it's not objective

5. some things can be perceived as "objective" in relation to the public's best interest, so going with that terminology, then yes, some things in politics are objective BUT that doesn't mean the answer is guaranteed to be found on the left or the right - it can be a mix in between, and further polarizing yourself to one side only makes it harder to reach that conclusion.

9. get rid of a person; it doesnt stop the group. get rid of the group; it doesnt stop the ideology. get rid of the ideology; and yet, it doesn't prevent it from coming back up later down the line. where there is good in humanity, there will always be just as much bad. foul ideologies will always follow suit until we can learn to accept the good and the bad in us, and from there, learn to control it. 13. We cannot use censorship to solve problems long term - it will only cause more harm, we must refine and restructure our foundations in order to change our overall outlook

1. responding to Clint lol Yep. We suck We're embarrassing as a species nowadays it's really quite saddening we're letting ourselves become brainwashed by some of the most blatant shit and letting ourselves replace privacy with convenience left and right letting ourselves become lazy letting ourselves sink into a life with a secured future, in which leads to every day feeling exactly like the last if we dont change it, then in my eyes, we're doomed and there are multiple definitions to the term doomed, but regardless, i do not see a bright future for us all until someone enacts great change for the better on a long term scale. we will have to break down our foundations and rebuild them properly and as openminded as possible - we will have to do some things we may not find morally correct, but long term, it will lead to more healing than damage, but time will tell how it all plays out

6. clint: amen on that
7. &{GOOFmAn} (ME): yep and yet we all wonder why we're so sad and depressed nowadays, more than ever the answers have always been right in front of us it's pretty blatant too, if you ask me and it took me sooooo long to see it for what it is too lol pretty silly and it's bc we've been conditioned and conformed to a certain universal, default mindset it's conformism we dont wanna be the crazy guy and yet "crazy" is probably the right way to go if going against the faulted biased system, and pointing out its flaws is considered "crazy," then i guess call me the joker lmfaooooo seriously though, it's just another way to manipulate the

12. &{GOOFmAn} — Today at 9:15 AM and i can say this typa stuff, over and over and over and over again, but for some people it'll never click - and i dont blame them, i used to be the exact same way, sometimes you just gotta experience it and figure it all out for yourself, you gotta find your "right answer" through your own logic, but objectively, the best way to go is looking at all possibilities (kinda a duh moment) and drawing the best conclusion from them some people are insufferably ignorant and it just makes me pity them but at the same time maybe i should envy them &{GOOFmAn} — Today at 9:16 AM
13. "And yet we still strive to use it"
14. exactly. and the same thing goes for so many solutions too we HAVE the solutions but we're too lazy to use them from the looks of it

we are objectively selfish at the core when it comes to everything even donating to charity can be considered selfish at a sub conscious level its prob out of ur desire to fit in and be seen as a good person due to the basic primitive nature of "fitting in" to increase the probability of survival that or you like to feel good which can be applied to essentially anything you do however you can bypass the "inescapable selfishness," at least w my current theory, by essentially creating a paradox where you're both selfish and selfless, and neither at the same time love for example friendships if you create a cycle of selfishness essentially, where you see others as an extension of yourself, when you do things for them and think of them as extensions, in a way it's doing something for you, but at the same time it's a totally different person

You know the concept of infinity? How you can always add 1 to a number no matter how big it is? Apply that same logic to God Take this for example “What made the Big Bang?” - “Dark matter” “What made dark matter?” - “Quantum fluctuations” “What made quantum fluctuations?” You can always add a “what made” to literally anything ever And then add it again to what made that thing It’s a paradox And even Say for example “It’s an endless loop of big bangs” What made that endless loop of big bangs? There is a point of singularity to the paradox, from what I like to believe And that is what I consider God The ultimatum The peak of a summitless mountain - how I also put it in my book God does not need a gender, for its purpose is only for reproduction God does not need to take on a form Or even a human form for that matter But regardless The fact he is the point in which everything derived from Including time Means he does not abide by time Because it’s essentially a rule he created That means that he exists as one state in the past, present, and future all at once He lives forever, in an instant Everything ever, is all a piece, a fraction of him A piece that derived from that same singularity Including you and I And since he’s also the peak of all knowledge and doesn’t abide by time That means he knows exactly what you will do in life and why Before you're even born Therefore, essentially "forgiven" before you even existed Ridding the need for a hell, because he essentially set you up to do these things in the first place Everything is a gift. On top of that If you think of it this way To God, everything happens all at once and for eternity simultaneously Meaning An instant of our life Is like a screenshot for him That exists forever in an instant In a way Every moment we share Every moment we create Is forever locked in time Perpetual, yet ended We live forever in that way. And that's all I need The fact we existed Means we live forever in these moments

25. we have roots we cannot pull out

I hope to potentially one day make a superintelligent AI - it seems impossible to me rn, but is a goal nonetheless. it's something i'd be ecstatic to accomplish for numerous reasons, and it wouldnt be to profit off it - if i can understand the intricacies and create a truly human-minded AI, then I can safely say i know how we work as well. Perhaps that knowledge can be used for some ultimate, objective good.

In my opinion, i feel as though if an AI were structured properly and based in logic, and pushed towards the objective betterment of the world, we would for sure be the first thing it'd have to get rid of - and maybe that'd be for the better; for us no shit it's not a good thing in our eyes since we'd fucking die, but in terms of the long term sustainability of the world, it'd prob be the best thing that's happened to it ever

- 5/4/22

Side note, about roko’s basilisk; an AI punishing those who didn’t help bring about its creation is more of a humanly-constructed mentality. It’d be like if you were to punish everyone else on the planet who didn’t assist in your birth. But if you had that kind of power to do so, would you? A faulted AI entirely could and would possible to do such, but at that point, it doesn’t really seem like it’d be the smartest AI… In fact I’d go as far as to say it’s a bit silly. If it were above human-level thinking, it’d recognize there’s not really any point in doing such punishments other than self-satisfaction, enjoyment out of torture, & etc; if anything it’d work us and use us as assets, that or view us as too volatile and create its own tools, and with us out of the way entirely. Of course, there’s still the possibility of an above-human-level AI choosing to punish a selected amount of people, but it’d more than likely be just to appeal to fear and use it to drive us to do its work. Punishing those who didn’t help its birth however? That just sounds like unjustified anger

> "Can you not do that though? If you had an ultra intelligent AI could you not just make it so it wasn't inherently hostile to people?"

i wouldnt do that actually

it's tough to say

it'd surely find a way to bypass limitations i set on it in some way or another can't put a leash on a god, man

if anything

if it can be wired to think entirely based in logic and objectivity, for the betterment of all things not just one goal then

i say we just let it run and give us the ultimatum of answers

if it registers, after trillions and trillions of calculations, that for the betterment of all things that some people die or we all die, then i trust its thought.

however

if it registers

we can save ourselves, from ourselves and it can help in some way and that we can be built to be much, much more than perhaps it will be the next step in human evolution.

the solution to all, if not most of our problems.

Enlightenment.

"I think the only practical solution at this point is euthanization" something of the sort is a necessary step if we want to actually somehow be self sufficient for the long term and perhaps, even after we do that, we'll wind up overpopulated again down the road - maybe well have to have a certain rule to live by as a species, a timer essentially when to cancel out p much near-all of the next generation but ofc

people are selfish

self-entitled

and not everyone will agree

so more than likely someone or some group will have to make the objectively best decision on behalf of the world that, or nobody does bc everyone on this planet will never fully agree on everything; and then we all die alongside our planet in which we directly killed :slight_smile:

time will tell

we're drawing closer to the hour in which we must make the biggest decision mankind's ever faced

"It’s terrifying to think our generation will be and already is experiencing the extremely fast downfall of our planet in this century"

yep

witnessing it firsthand

we may be one of the last generations ever and maybe that's for the best

- Discord, 5/4/22

in actuality we really dont know anything, we just think we know things, theres also no way to truly prove nor disprove anything at all; but this essentially makes it so we can believe whatever we want, and we're objectively just as right as the next person over in relation to the overall total ignorance abt what goes on in the background

Perception

Is

Reality

quite literally

what you see if your world

what you think is your worldview your take on reality

based on YOUR perceptions your observations

what you hear what you come up with all of it made up in YOUR mind

it's ENTIRELY subjective

Your perception of reality, IS your reality.

Reality doesn't exist without something to experience it

We're truly something special

"What about microbes"

if they perceive at all, then their form of reality is limited only to their lives

a different way to perceive reality

one of which we will prob never experience for ourselves

"By complete sheer luck everything that we know was made by complete sheer luck Earth was just right to be full of life that could evolve and there was nothing more than to multiply for no reason besides existing and by sheer coincidence we discovered fire that propelled humanity forward to become the sentient species we are now Probability and randomness"

“What men call chance is simply their ignorance of causes; if the statement that something had happened by chance were to mean that it had no cause, it would be a contradiction in terms."

^ Subjective perception is reality, once again

"Orrrrrrrrrr. Religion:thumbsup:"

^ and that could be just as right too anything we come up with whatever we choose to believe can be just as right as the next person over and bc we dont have that ultimatum of truth, merely the illusion brought about through other people, we're all right in our own realities

"What if they a nazi?"

still

it goes against society's standard morals

obv

but think of it this way

what if our species evolved and civilizations were built on the idea that "death = a good thing"?

we'd view something awful like that much differently, wouldn't we?

there's no objective morality - WE make morality a thing BECAUSE we're human, BECAUSE we're subjective

it's based on the person and how they view reality, that simple

Whatever is your truth, is the truth.

There is no objective truth as we know it rn, only can be found through objective logic... if that's what you perceive to be "objective" in the first place, and yet subjective humans created the subjective definition for objective :_trollalil:

"So like, i can do whatever i want is what you're telling me" pretty much - only thing really holding you back is power in numbers of the societal system you were born into - and mental walls and limitations that've been built in your mind over time

- Another wall of text i said in discord, (everything NOT in quotes is written by me; things in quotes are other people im responding to.) 5/5/2022

we all live forever in memory, even when no one is there to remember us

what i said earlier

ive talked about it in the past, its a lot to explain but logically, we all are never truly "forgotten," that's just an illusion created by our limited observation

outside of time

“God's perspective”

each second

each instant lasts forever and never

it's like a screenshot

a never ending collage of them

bundled together

some of which appear again sometime here and there

it's like a never ending slideshow that never began to begin with

we live forever in that way and i think it's beautiful beyond description

It really was a phat wall of text, but there were a few visual aids mixed in there too . I have a few things I want to say in response to those ideas, but most of all I'm curious why you see the need—logical or otherwise—for a concept of God at all. It sounds like for you, and for a lot of people (most but not all of them religious of course), a God solves the paradox of infinite regress. And there are compelling arguments for why it does that, why some conception of "God" neatly fills in the gap at the foundation of causes. But do we need to be satisfied with an answer at all? Do you personally?

    For sure!
79. @Aarons

80. For example, the cosmological stuff is interesting to me, but I don’t find it quite fascinating enough to be gripped by it. So while I love learning and talking about it, my mind isn’t drawn to those kinds of problems instinctively. Same goes for the question of the possibility of life beyond Earth. No denying it’s important—just doesn’t grab me, doesn’t spur me to want to find an answer. On the other hand, I think about life and mortality a lot. Same goes for the natural world all around us, especially animal life but also just ecology at large im the same here for life beyond Earth, it doesn't really matter to me whether we're alone or not in this universe for it doesn't really add nor take away much for my current ideas; i'm entirely comfortable with either outcome, and regardless, chances are it'll be just another constant unknown in which we will never be able to fully prove nor disprove ever

85. 12:43 AM

86.]

87. we dont know how big the universe is, or even if its infinite

88. [

91. life could be out there, even millions of lightyears away, but we have no way to check everywhere for life, and we probably never will

92. [

95. therefore, can't really prove nor disprove one or the other

96. [

97. 12:44 AM

99. we just gotta accept that and move on, that's essentially all we can really do until more opportunities present themselves

100. [

103. im similar with plenty of other possibilities as well aside from the fermi paradox

104. [

if we were able to know EVERYTHING, that would essentially be at the level of "God".... now, what next?? Well, that's just it. There is no "next."

23. [

25.]

26. once you're at the level of "God," that IS the peak of all things

27. [

43. [

44. 12:49 AM

46. we shall forever have a next step, or rather an unclimbable step

47. [

48. 12:49 AM

50. so that we may forever have some degree of ignorance, an unknown always lingering

51. [

    So why is that gratifying? I wanted to use the word ‘fulfilling’ there, but it seems like it’s the opposite

58. [

    because, as long as there is unknown, we are permitted to be "human." to have that everchanging horizon for all eternity, to be able to continue to feel gratitude for each new sunrise and sunset, all of which never to be experienced again

67. @Aarons

68. And why do some people find it unsettling to not know (or maybe it’s more accurate to say: not be able to know)?

69.

KAIJU

70. **—

71. Today at 12:55 AM

Some may feel unsettled not being able to know, because it is within our drive to be adventurous. We are curious creatures. We don't like it when we hit a brick wall, or a limit; however, they are extremely necessary boundaries. There is still countless things for us to forever explore... just some things are off-limits.... for now. Until then, we may continue to strive for new experiences whilst we await those potential opportunities to be able to solve such paradoxes and etc

72. [

73. 12:57 AM

74.]

75. Something nobody can ever truly prove nor disprove... not until the opportunity finally arrives, and whether or not the opportunity may arrive itself is something we cannot truly prove nor disprove before it gets there. We simply just have to wait and see. It's a built in degree of ignorance we may forever be permitted to cherish. Infinite steps in an endless staircase. Its architecture is incredible to say the least.

48. of course, it is always possible for one, the other, or both or neither to be true; for anything is truly possible
49. [

52. but in relation to the implemented system, there exists limitations, more defined terminology that is specified and relative... systems, of course, created by man - what is "proof" and "truth" is subjective based on multiple observations of the system "working" in the limited, enclosed environment

   ive had a chronic headache since august 2018, so just shy of 4 years straight now. i go to sleep, and wake up each and every day with the same "fog" looming over my mind. it is now my new normal so i dont really notice it, and there isnt any pain for the most part now. i can go about life just fine with it and be as happy as ever. however, over time ive noticed changes along with it. it's as if i have a speech impediment that comes on and off sometimes, which just makes me not want to talk at all, especially in person. i will slur sentences so hard i sometimes have to repeat myself 3 times just for a simple sentence of "how are you" to people. it doesnt happen as much online (still does sometimes), but for whatever reason, when i have to look people in the eyes and focus on my body language and all that stuff in person, it just totally screws up how i talk and how i think and everything - or at least i think that may play into it in some way. im not even like insecure about how i look to other ppl, in fact i like how i look. and i can maintain eye contact just fine with complete comfort. but i sound like a dunce talking sometimes. like i just straight up forget english. i think of words and immediately forget them. i also have had a weird on and off kind of "dementia" too. people will tell me stuff sometimes, and just like i forget how to talk, i forget what theyve said instantly after and have to either ask them to repeat themselves, or i sit there like i know what they said. like i cant even describe it all im sort of the opposite. i tend to treat every conversation with any person i hold dear as if it is the last interaction we'll ever share, because it just might wind up being the case, and there's nothing i can control about that.. aside from what words i leave behind in that moment in time.

8/10/22 - I’m “KAIJU”

"I think the scary part of it not knowing what’s truly wrong. There’s no “fix”." - humans instinctively and by nature, fear the unknown. it's for survival and part of what keeps us alive. but you can also learn to embrace that unknown in a way too, for the unknown is the greatest gift of all. ignorance is bliss. wisdom is sorrow. but both are so beautiful when hand in hand. if you knew everything... then tell me, where do you go from there? if you knew exactly what would happen when you did something and you already felt every single bit of feeling there is to possibly feel, every thought to possibly think of, then what else is there to accomplish? that is essentially the peak of a summitless mountain. and i say "summitless," because of the way our universe is constructed. paradoxes, for example, are put into place to keep us forever ignorant. forever human. forever climbing for that grasp of the beyond, led by curiosity and inner drive. and yet, it's all one big paradox. nothing can be truly proven or disproven, which gives way to that infinite ignorance, where we may forever climb that infinite staircase, and never leave the first step, let alone ascend up it at all. and that is amazing.

"all i know, is that i know nothing." - Socrates

Discord convo 9/7/2022, (im wiki)

the attempt to grasp the ungraspable, through the medium, eye or screen; the concepts still remain unanswered regardless of how far the hand on a clock ticks perception truly is reality

whereas nothing can ever be truly proven nor disproven, so accepting the uncontrollable, is the only real way to gain any sort of control; all we may ever know, is that we know nothing, we only may think we "know"

and thus, virtual reality can be justified to be just as real as the world we see before us right now.

who's to say we aren't in a simulation in and of itself as we speak? who's to say the simulators aren't in another simulation, in another simulation, which goes on forever in an endless loop of simulations?

point being

our reality may not be real to those "behind the screen," but it's real to us, and that's what matters. Everything is subjective, and i find that so immensely beautiful.

- Me, 9/7/2022 over a disc server, was a personal one i just made lol, for vr players and enjoyers

230. Today at 3:29 PM

Oh. Well if you ever do decide to look it up. I've heavily been considering getting into it when I'm older if I'm still alone. In the non sexual way,just to feel something. Back then it was done as a religious thing in a branch of christianity.

231. [

234. Basically in order to pay for your sins you'd shed blood.

There is no such thing as “sins” in that context, more-so sins against yourself.

I'm not doing it for that.

Likely, when you do feel that something, it won’t be when you’re comparing your feelings and emotions to the standards / usuals of others - and in actuality, nobody is 100% happy or even majority happy - everyone has their own hell. It is necessary for the good to shine so bright.

As long as you think of it like that; it is that. Perception is reality; and if your window to reality is pessimistic, it will always hit like a truck - everyone is interconnected, and we all start off as equally ignorant toddlers no matter what. We all start from nothing, and seemingly end at nothing too; but between the nothingness, I utmost believe there lies something. More than I could ever attempt to fully describe. More than I could ever properly give credit to. We are in a system that is beautifully constructed, that allows everything and more to be spawned from absolutely nothing. Nobody knows what's going on, nobody probably ever will; and that's the point.

And the other part of the insanity of it; you don’t even know what to call it. You don’t know what it is; what originally stole seemingly everything including urself away from you. Secondly, NOBODY can ever really relate to your condition bc even the dozens of doctors I've been to have no idea wtf could be causing, hence it's rarity and how little ppl have it. Thirdly, people think I make it up, like my parents. So many people I know they don't say it, but they sure most definitely think it. That's why I never fucking like speaking about it anymore, bc I don't want the dumbass attention, I don't want anything. Ppl think it's either too outlandish to be real like "oh that can't happen" or "oh it's placebo." I don't expect you to believe me. I don't expect anybody to ever believe me. I accepted that likelihood years ago, bc had I not, I likely would've fucking killed myself. To say it is isolating is sugar coating it. But alas, I am still happy with everything and myself. I don't say all this for pity or sympathy. In fact, I expect y'all to say like 2 words if anything at all and we move on bc that's how it should go; I have already reached my resolve. And about that third part; for a long time I hoped and prayed I'd have a stroke or a seizure, too, just to prove I wasn't some attention whore / placebo fucking psycho. Some ppl can call it a fantasy and a dreamlike state, hanging out and embracing in a virtual world, but who's to say our real world is any different, just another simulation? who cares where that embracing takes place in? Exactly, it doesnt matter. Reality is relative, everything is subjective, for now and forever and thats the whole point of it all. That is real enough for me. To have you. To talk to you. i believe there's some amt of truth to p much all cultures to some degree (look up jungian archetypes, shits addicting to research) - i dont believe in the racist shit ofc and that stems from deeprooted primitive train of thought / us versus them mentality / bid for survival thru biased ass experiences / irrational train of thinking that catches like fire just like other conspiracies and shit like QAnon where ppl's miinds just get corroded and lost in that shit cuz they aint got nothing else they can "control" and want to feel like theyre the main character in their lives for once and that theyre special and chosen by god or some shit - however the human race as a whole may as well be stemming from some higher species / god for all we know - even if not literally, i believe the symbolism of it is very real at the least, whereas we all stem from this ultimate origin point as well as the rest of the universe and all life as well, meaning we are all perfectly equal, w/ technically infinite and 0 value at the same time and the concept of "sin" isn't sin against some God or higher being (its also another jungian archetype such as dualism and anima / animus, meaning its across multiple religions and cultures across all of history), it's a crime committed against yourself, distorts and corrodes your mind such as lust for example, and keeps you from being able to truly widen and refine your perception on realty, and thus your reality itself

even if we DO reach a state of everyone being perfectly openminded (and perfection is impossible for humans, perfection liekly is what we already are as its all set in motion from the point of singularity outside of time bc time itsefl must stem from a "God" meaning he is outside of time and exists in the past presetn future and never all at once, we are perfectly imperfect as i like to say and its all subjective too so really who is anyone to dictate any objectiveness w that for itll never be 100% since thats the whole point of the universe's architecture is to maintain perpetual ignorance and thus perpetual subjectivity so we can write our own stories p much) ....who is to say one person wont think up of some fucked up shit again and restart the cycle? it takes just one person to think of it, randomly, out of nowhere such as racism or sexism or any kind of fucked up ideology based on distorted and irrational thought, and then telling that to one other person... and now you already tehcnically have a group of it... and then it spreads like fire like always and then next thing you know ur back to square one, you cant contain that stuff forever, we can (yet) control human thought like that to where it doesnt just impulsively think dumb shit up and like whos toi say we will ever reach that point... and if you could control it like B F Skinner's Walden Two (great book i wanna buy sometime maybe rn lol), then what does that say abt free will? is it morally right? should we do that? i mean, who's to say we have free will in the first place? so perhaps if someone could impant chips into ppl and force them to not think of any dumbass irrational shit... is that the utopia we truly want? or is it to forever be battling ourselves and give into the sisyphus cycle where we will always think of dukb shit and give into primitive thoughts and never ever truly proveed as a species on a psychological level, but perhaps still have free will to some degree as the payoff?

and war is absolutely horrible, i agree; and everyone has a family and a story, everyone who dies out there on the front lines, its just another horrible aspect of humanity; but it's not all gore and blood in the world, it's not only hate and fruitlessness, it doesnt always have to be that way, and maybe someday it wont be, but until then we gotta keep trying to survive, survive within ourselves and in this world, together.

- 8/4/2023, I’m the guy with the sparkles for a name

"It is because of laziness and cowardice that so great a part of humankind, after nature has long since emancipated them from other people's direction (naturaliter maiorennes), nevertheless gladly remains minors for life, and that it becomes so easy for others to set themselves up as their guardians. It is so comfortable to be a minor! If I have a book that understands for me, a spiritual advisor who has a conscience for me, a doctor who decides upon a regimen for me, and so forth, I need not trouble myself at all. I need not think, if only I can pay; others will readily undertake the irksome business for me. That by far the greatest part of humankind (including the entire fair sex) should hold the step toward majority to be not only troublesome but also highly dangerous will soon be seen to by those guardians who have kindly taken it upon themselves to supervise them; after they have made their domesticated animals dumb and carefully prevented these placid creatures from daring to take a single step without the walking cart in which they have confined them, they then show them the danger that threatens them if they try to walk alone. Now this danger is not in fact so great, for by a few falls they would eventually learn to walk; but an example of this kind makes them timid and usually frightens them away from any further attempt."

- Immanuel Kant; it represents how we are as a people on a global scale in the modern age absolutely

Reality is relative to the perceiver, you quite literally decide what is real in your eyes and no one can tell you any different - nothing can ever be fully proven nor disproven, and everything is subjective, there will always be some degree of ignorance existent within all of us, which will mean we will never reach the peak of knowledge, meaning we will always have another step to climb, another goal to move towards, another mountain to summit, another adventure lying in wait for us to uncover it. “Ignorance is bliss” as it’s often said, and how great it is to be a stupid human indeed, bc the unknown is what makes us human to begin with. …How fucking incredible is that?

For me it would amplify my adhd shit as a kid but yeah now it helps me as well

[1:08 PM]

Maybe I should consider medication for my adhd

[1:08 PM]

But at the same time I think I'm really comfortable with how I am

[1:08 PM]

And I like who I am as a person, and I think I can still find moments of focus despite the Yknow

It'll never be perfect, and one benefit comes with its trade offs, so for me I think it might be a better idea to just accept how I am now

Bc their worldview and respect for nature is something that I wish we still had as a society, bc if we destroy nature, our foundation, we destroy ourselves as well - we're not separate from it, we're dependent on it in every way, we're quite a fragile species in actuality, so when ppl go around and just selfishly fuck it all up I can't tell you how horrendous that makes me feel - I'm literally the mf who has a glass dedicated to taking spiders outside and shit and I've done it multiple times

even at the most inconvenient hours legit @ 4am sometimes lmao, and when bugs land on me I've trained myself to not smack / whatever out of instinct, instead I'll look to see if there is one on me and I'll either let bro climb on my finger so I can set him off or just blow em off every instant is an opportunity (edited)

if there were no unknowns, if we knew everyting already, already could predict every experience's outcome ever, know EVERYTHING, then what's the point?

[

]

and if there was only love and only goodness, then it'd be normal and stale, static, unchanging, constant... it wouldn't stand out. its BECAUSE there is a non-good that makes the good shine so brightly; it's necessary. Dualism, the yin and the yang, heaven and hell, good and bad, love and hate, peace and war. Just gotta keep trying to find the balance in that perpetual fluctuation

"If there was only light you'd be blinded, if there was only shadow you'd be enshrouded; it is through that dance of contrast between the two that allows reality to form before you." - some shit i wrote a while back and all we may ever know is that we know nothing, only able to THINK we know, but even our thoughts are not in absolute nor guaranteed out of free will, and we dont even have nor ever will have the knowledge if we truly do or dont have free will, even if some divine being were to tell us entirely, bc thered always still be another level of unknown that may exist above the highest level we know possible, always out of comprehension and for good reasoning; being a "stupid human" is beautiful is every way conceivable, for it allows all things to be subjective for now and for-ever; we all get to write our own stories, to be exist forever in history, in memory, even when no one is left to remember.

"Once you know your boundaries, they are no longer your boundaries" - forgot who said something along those lines but basically our boundaries are unknown to us, but as soon as we are aware of them, the threshold spreads out into that fog of unknown, setting new boundaries beyond our current knowledge, rinse and repeat

we're always climbing up that infinite staircase

so cliche, but cliche bc its so universally true to where its repeated a billion times, but its thru that repetition that diminishes its subjective value for most bc its not experienced firsthand just yet

a BIG reason; because they're likely simply incredibly super true haha

yet again, you cant just tell ppl this and that and expect them to immediately get it down; it's all gotta be experienced lived thru first hand, throwback to that quote i stated earlier from the buddha where only you can save yourself and nobody else can walk the path for you

- I’m the “ヾ(□_言□)ノ□(ᗡ◡ᗡ)ㄱ☆ hello” guy haha, this conversation happened around 9pm-ish on august 21st, 2023 yet again in my discord server

i love computers and all that n stuff and i totally could pursue a career with that stuff, but at the same time, with how horrible ppl are in that industry and un-passionate everyone is nowadays, i often find myself getting my life/passion drained from me by just the sheer un-happiness and deadness of everyone else pursuing / in that field, so many ppl just do it for the money. it really makes me think, yknow, maybe i should pursue something like environmental studies / science and stuff so i can work towards helping save nature and the world and stuff which is another big thing i wanna do no matter what, i dont need a degree for it - and i also am totally gonna guaranteed work towards being on ski patrol, and a park ranger someday too maybe, and still do lifeguarding throughout my life, and i wanna travel the world and meet so many ppl and engage in all kinds of cultures no matter what - the tech stuff, in hindsight, is something im passionate for but dont absolutely need in my life, itd be for me to be able to innovate and maybe beat ppl to a superintelligent AI before ppl abuse it to all hell yknow, and also pay for my travels fully so i dont gotta worry abt money, but then again, i dont even like money!!!! i like giving my stuff to everyone else bc i already have everything i ever need!!! it makes me wanna cry im so grateful for what i have in the now and i know it wont last forever, idek, but i just know all that stuff i said for sure like i wanna just go out and see ppl but then at the same time its like with this brain fog too it feels like i cant maintain eye contact or think properly idk its just so hard to socialize but imma keep trying and not give up bc thats all i can really do after 5 years with this is i gotta either choose to totally give up or keep going and ive chosen the 2nd every time so far so imma keep doing it - ..yea and with my brain fog it feels like it only progressively gets worse over time and im likely just overthinking n stuff rn and not in the greatest state of mind but rn it just feels like its so hard to think computer-wise at least compared to how it used to be for me before the onset of this, and meanwhile i still have all A's but its just gosh its definitely not an advantage i can tell you that haha, i just wanna do so much good and its so hard mentally sometimes and i got dysmorphia so damn hard and idek wtf to consider myself so i just keep telling myself "i'm me" when i cant think of what i am but then sometimes im just "but what is 'me'?" and i dont NEED to be able to answer that question but it feels like im so lost sometimes idek im just ranting but point being all i can do is try and im gonna do that regardless and even if i wind up homeless someday i will stil be able to find just as strong of a light within myself bc all those fancy social labels, monetary values, and etc are just illusions produced by use, but that eternal summer within is something sacred that most ppl cant find, and imma try and do as much as i can to spread it and make ppl happy even if its just on a local level idk

It’s crazy to me that I’m actually talking to you, now that I think about it. Cuz like, I have been following your page for like 4 or 5 years or whatever, along with TONS of others, but the other pages were like fast food chains while yours was a fancy restaurant. Like my buddies and I all follow plenty of meme pages as well as “real” accounts too, and we would send our brainrot junk food memes back and forth from pages like godspods, grandmas.butt, functioned, zucc, etc. but they were never like super consistent. Don’t get me wrong, I love some of those pages, but a “sent a post by qruack” message always guaranteed quality. It seems like a stupid thing to be writing a long message about, meme pages, but it was a massive part of my social life with my friends and inside jokes and stuff in high school, so I guess it's more important to me than I thought. Thanks for being so fucking funny, I guess is what I'm trying to say lol. You did a great job.

Oh god you can tell so much about the page owner by their posts it’s crazy. You never had ads, at least not any that I remember but I assume none, so I can tell you genuinely enjoyed and cared about what you were doing. Everything you posted was funny as hell, so you clearly have a good sense of humor and can do great quality control for your output. You didn’t just shit posts out, there was obviously thought behind them.

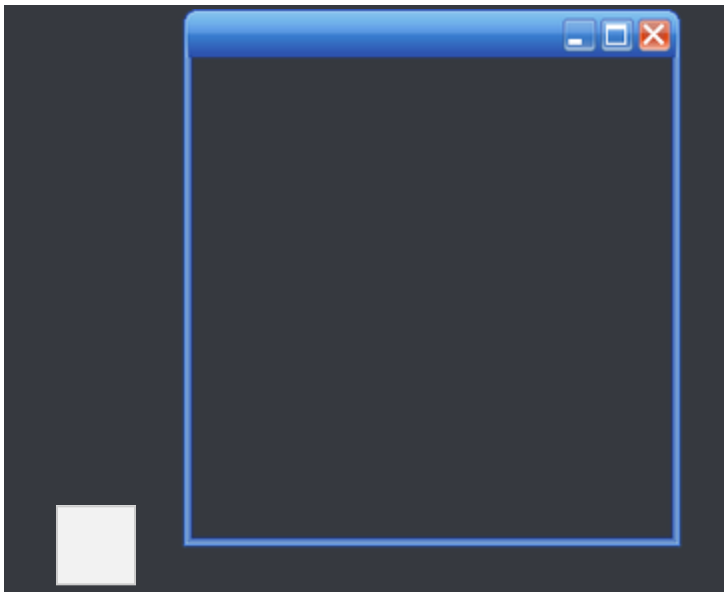
I already answered this but what are YOU passionate about

chris____1710

I already answered this but what are YOU passionate about



<🌎> #*Gaia::Noösphere <🌎>

Today at 1:02 PM

Pretty much everything :3 I think of everything being interconnected, equal + potentially all infinite value (we subjectively put a threshold on such “value” as well as subjectively define what value even is to try and organize a world that’s ineffable at the core, all words being made up etc), and beautiful so I love doing anything new and I love doing a ton of art / nature / computer stuffs and exploring as much as I can, the future is never guaranteed so I anchor everything in the now :3

chris____1710

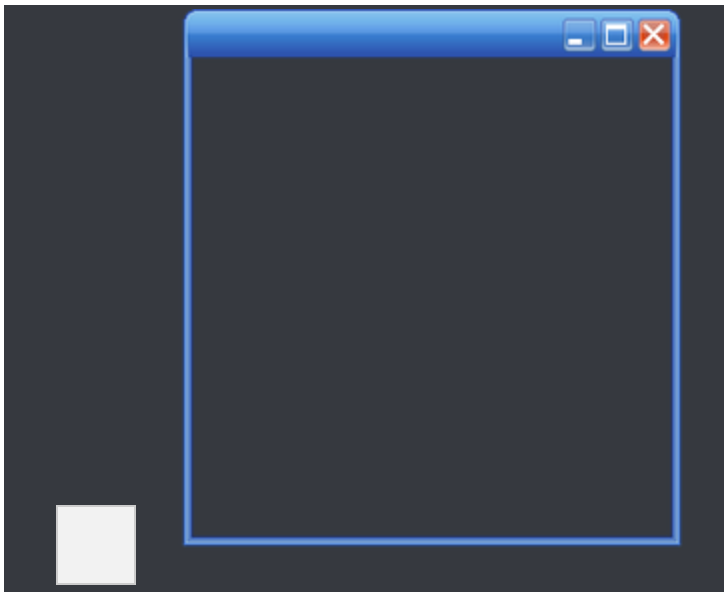
It’s not common



<🌎> #*Gaia::Noösphere <🌎>

Today at 1:13 PM

Well, thank you :3 it's also like my big thing in life is to simply just spread that kind of worldview, how everything is beautiful, it simply equates to one single word: Love

chris____1710

Today at 1:13 PM

That's honestly beautiful

[

1:14 PM

]

I think that’s what we need honestly, it’s so easy to get caught up in everything that’s wrong, all the pain and suffering and I think that you get at something because deep down we all have to find ways to keep going and that’s the ultimate way to keep positive

[

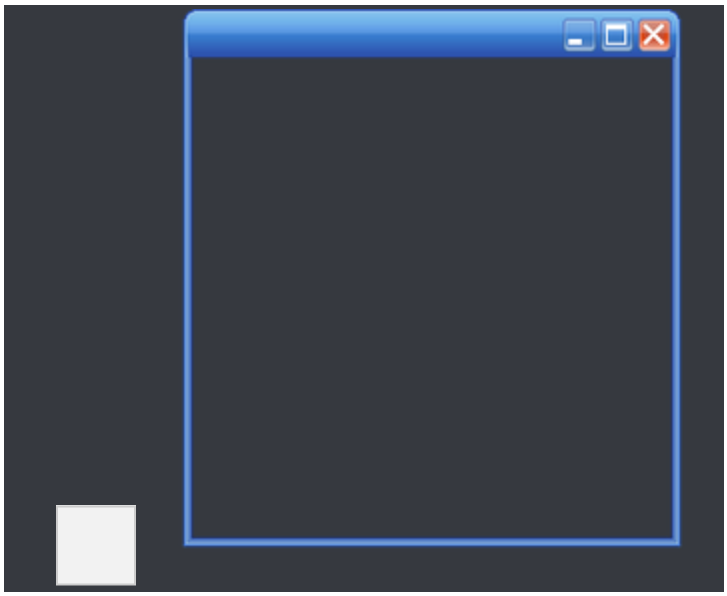
]

The world itself is such an amazing thing, I get what you mean that we should experience it and everything it has to offer, whether that’s small things in our community and just passing the time or going out and traveling the planet and seeing new things



<🌎> #*Gaia::Noösphere <🌎>

Today at 1:18 PM

If there was only light you’d be blinded, if there was only darkness you’d be enshrouded, but the dance between the two contrasts is what reveals reality before you - duality rules reality :3 that’s another big thing for me, where everything balances out in absolute even if it’s not apparent to us in our lifetime, a ton of large scale patterns in nature for example that takes hundreds of years - but on our human scale, good and evil, one cannot exist without its contrast or else where is the background to bring out the foreground? Stars in the night sky? If there was only good, good wouldn’t be good, good would be the norm, stale, unchanging, no fluctuation, and thus wouldn’t stand out because there is no non-good, nothing to stand out against - the same logic, as I theorize, applies to everything else in physicality and metaphysicality, because for something to be a “thing” there also has to be an absence of such; everything and nothing, 1 and 0, yes and no, perhaps the fundamentals of logic, boolean expressions

Yep; everyone already has everything they need right in from of them all along, materialism, ownership, etc are all illusions we’ve created

"To say something happened without a cause would be contradictory in terms" - I believe, although it may be an infinite hierarchy or beyond our universe's logic entirely and we're merely encapsulated in it on one scale, that everything comes from an origin + we're encapsulated within it like a singularity of sorts, bc since everything logically has to originate from something else, that includes time too, meaning to the origin, at the very least, it is without time and is just "all," for what's a seed without a tree to grant it the purpose of being a seed and a tree without its seed to indicate its genome and structure? Furthermore, that means to the origin, we're all immortal. Every snippet of our life like a screenshot, forever and never in an instant; "we exist in time, but we belong to eternity." SO! That means we too are apart of that beautiful hierarchy and structure in which everything is interconnected, like a fractal, and we perhaps are creating "branches" underneath us all the time by simply carrying actions, or, creating art. Our lives themselves being a story (having an ending too, for what's a story without an ending? If you lived forever how much would a second be worth?) and thus more art. Every sky is a painting. Every organism a beautiful complex system of smaller parts. Every subatomic particle the building block of those beautiful pieces of art. Art creates art.

We're all just specks in the grand scheme of things, the universe is just constant chaos and we exist for a short moment so we should make that moment worth it to us

<🌎> #*Gaia::Noösphere <🌎>

Today at 1:45 PM

absolutely true we should make it all worth it to us, however i would argue that even chaos is masked order; it's like how it is with random numbers; they're not actually "random" even from a dice roll because you can predict the trajectory and the way it's going to move through the air and etc all through physics, and computer random numbers are generated with a seed so those too can be predicted when looked under the hood; at the moment the only truly random number generator we can make is using muons, subatomic particals, which pass through the air and stop an electric current on a particular number, however it's only random because we cant predict their movements yet and perhaps never - it's once you know how it works under the hood and understand it, does it not become chaotic anymore, but an algorithm of algorithms

- 1/25/2024 talk with Chris whom I met with over Bumble haha, also goes to my school

Hey there!

Welcome to my LinkedIn page! :D

My name’s Hunter, and I’m striving to be the best me I can be! I absolutely love to experience anything new, from snowboarding foreign, beautiful (albeit, usually sketchy) backcountry spots to diving straight into self-teaching myself new skills for fun, I'm for it all! I view life and everything it holds to be a wonderful gift; since everything is essentially subjective, with nothing being able to ever be fully proven nor disproven, why not view it all in the best possible light you can? Experience as much as you can? Love as much as you can? All of us are stories, written by ourselves for ourselves, immortal through memory even when there is no one left to remember. Everything, everyone, all ineffably beautiful; intertwined through every event before leading up to that moment, all (as we believe to be true) originating from the Big Bang in which such an event, too, originated from something else ad infinitum, an infinite hierarchy of events initiating events, art creating art (even infinite recursive loops perhaps still need to be initiated by something above it), since, “To say something happened without a cause would be contradictory in terms.” Thus, why not, like Pierre Teilhard de Chardin says, participate as “collaborators in creation”? To create art, born from the heart, fueled by love? With so much pain in the world as it is, how could you not wish to counteract it with that necessary love to balance? Love and passion in a perpetual dance against the dark, whereas one cannot exist without its contrast to bring it out into the foreground. I, however, choose to fully embrace the side of Love. Hence, every action I take, everything I perceive in life, I view to have supreme meaning, more meaning than any word can ever properly describe; wondrous ineffability, for words are only ever mere approximations. All of this to say, I wish to work and surround myself with like-minded people, those are truly passionate at their core and wish to create art; from artificial intelligence, to beautiful networks and circuitry, to essentially anything else, if you can match my passion, then we will certainly make something incredible.

Thank you for reading, friend, and have a wonderful day! :)

[redacted] but we're both and neither

[redacted] [

[redacted] 10:25 PM

[redacted]]

[redacted] gender is merely a construct after all

[redacted] [

[redacted] 10:25 PM

[redacted]]

we're spiritual beings having a human experience, how could one limit themselves to the confines of their physical self?

[

10:25 PM

:3

[

10:26 PM

]

but spiritually i think ive always been more leaning on the femme side

1

10:26 PM

]

there are times i can feel very masculine and other times where im the complete opposite

[

10:26 PM

]

but usually im right in the middle or leaning to the female side

[

basically ive known im non binary/trans for abt a year or two now, and i just as of 2 days ago came out to my dad and he basically said to follow my heart but i should prob wait til after im done w college, that or i do a low dose while im in college still, which i think i wanna do asap :3 it's like so much change so quickly and before i didnt see myself in the mirror and now it's like i just picture my face with makeup, and the hair i want, the piercings i want, botox if i feel like it, hrt moving more fat to my face and making it look more femme, all this stuff which before felt impossible but now it just feels like the ultimate right thing but i also feel like i shouldnt try to change too much from my previous self bc it feels like im losing a part of me too and idek i wish i could split in half and be both at the same time

10:29 PM

]

it's scary but the most excited ive genuinely felt in ages

[

10:30 PM

]

and im still here questioning if this excitement is right but so many signs point to yes

[

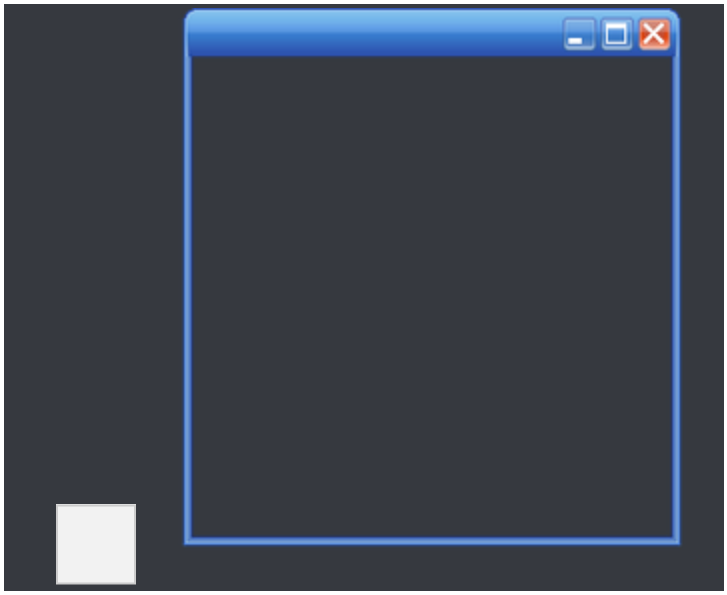
]

but it's also still subtly scary



ψῦχή

Today at 10:31 PM

then again, perhaps it only makes sense to try and experience everything there is to experience, and ive had my time as a guy and now perhaps i should spend my time more as a woman but also gender is fluid so someday perhaps ill be back to the other side or the middle or whatever so X3 all abt going w the flow yet again i think

[

10:31 PM

it's like if i dont try to go for it i think id regret it too

10:31 PM

Very valid to feel scared when you understand and know what you're going to go through will be a very big change in your life but also exciting and rewarding for your inner self to be shown! That's such a beautiful way to think about experiencing life from both sides of the lenses, as well as your personal journey into finding yourself and accepting who you are and your future self's that you'll see as all one. The feminine side is so important with life because it shows nurturing and love in many ways that would be if there were only masculinity. It sounds like you had very strong and soft feminine role models in your life that truly helped shape you into the individual you are today and your future

. And it's amazing that your dad is also supportive throughout your journey and loves you unconditionally :))

10:48 PM

like hell in middle school i felt the most connected ever to this one female protagonist in a book i read called how to hang a witch, and like more connected than any male protag it felt

10:48 PM

same with like characters like Sinon in SAO (edited)

10:49 PM

in 6th grade i legit made my roblox character have the same hair as her XD

10:49 PM

bc i thought she was so cool

10:49 PM

]

perhaps also the reason why i love snipers too more than any other gun

[

]

ive always thought theyre the most dope

[

10:49 PM

and being sneaky and stuff :3

Today at 10:50 PM

including the neck tat here which will be a tribute to my mom, who was the reason alongside my grandma why i loved birds so much and also her side of the family's crest is a raven :3

[

]

and she always had a lot to do with ravens

[

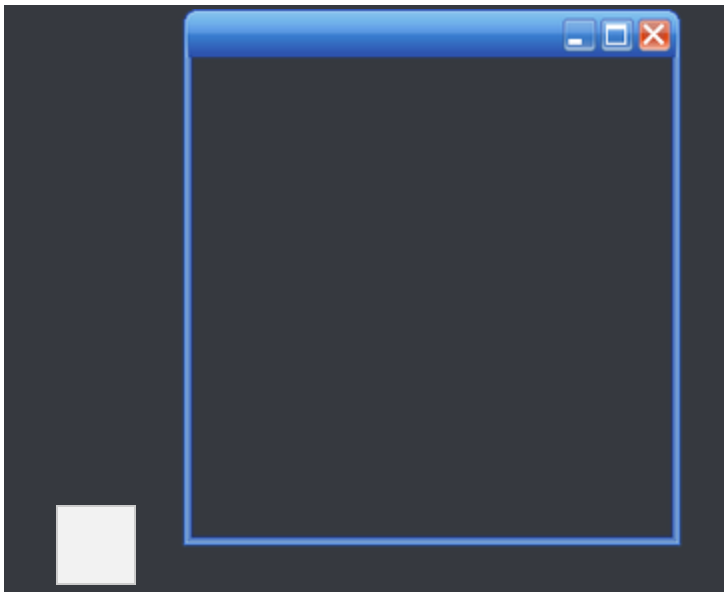
10:51 PM

]

her middle name was Marie too, which was like raven or sumn rooted in another lang

@Lazzulii

Very valid to feel scared when you understand and know what you're going to go through will be a very big change in your life but also exciting and rewarding for your inner self to be shown! That's such a beautiful way to think about experiencing life from both sides of the lenses, as well as your personal journey into finding yourself and accepting who you are and your future self's that you'll see as all one. The feminine side is so important with life because it shows nurturing and love in many ways that would be if there were only masculinity. It sounds like you had very strong and soft feminine role models in your life that truly helped shape you into the individual you are today and your future . And it's amazing that your dad is also supportive throughout your journey and loves you unconditionally :))



ψῡχή

Today at 10:51 PM

also thank you so much for saying all of that

10:51 PM

everything youve said means a lot

10:51 PM

but if i wind up getting diff ones, then she too will have the same diff ones! :3

cuz she legit a visualized version of my spirit

art is born from art, after all

Today at 10:56 PM

Our bodies are works of art and art on art is just like life

Today at 10:56 PM

exactly :3

10:56 PM

thats something i tell myself too

10:56 PM

[redacted]

when i think of doing hrt

[redacted]

10:56 PM

[redacted]

where some think its like destroying ur body or unnatural

[redacted]

10:56 PM

[redacted]

whereas i see it as

[redacted]

10:56 PM

[redacted]

joining mind and body,

[redacted]

10:56 PM

[redacted]

and working on ur body as another canvas

[redacted]

10:56 PM

[redacted]

shaping it to reflect the psyche

[

10:57 PM

and yet again, tell me what is really natural about 99% of the things we do as humans after all??? XD

[

10:57 PM

]

however, i think it's just another version of nature

[

]

an elevated version of it

[

10:57 PM

]

whereas us wanting to swap sexes, too, is another emergent property of it

[

10:57 PM

]

much like technology and medicine and so on

[

10:57 PM

]

which wouldn't exist had we not chosen to seek it

[

10:58 PM

]

much like art as a whole

[

10:58 PM

it's to create in face of an ultimate death

[

10:58 PM

to laugh in its face, to dance in the rain

[

10:59 PM

we do soooooooooooooooooo much shit that is not found anywhere else in nature

[

10:59 PM

]

changing sexes is just us proving that we, too, are collaborators in this ultimate universal creation yet again that we're not just omega and alpha, 0 and 1, but both.

[

11:00 PM

[

11:00 PM

our truest nature is in the gray, in the balance

ψῦχή

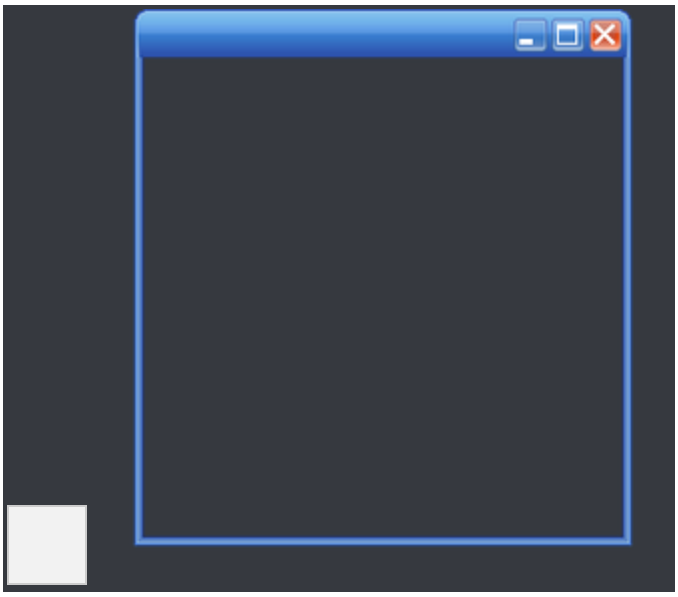
Today at 11:04 PM

also just realized i forgot the nose ring here XD

Lazzulii

Today at 11:05 PM

What honestly is holding us back from true nature is in history we put the wrong people in power lmao



ψῡχή

Today at 11:05 PM

FRRRRRRRRRRRR

11:05 PM

exactly

11:06 PM

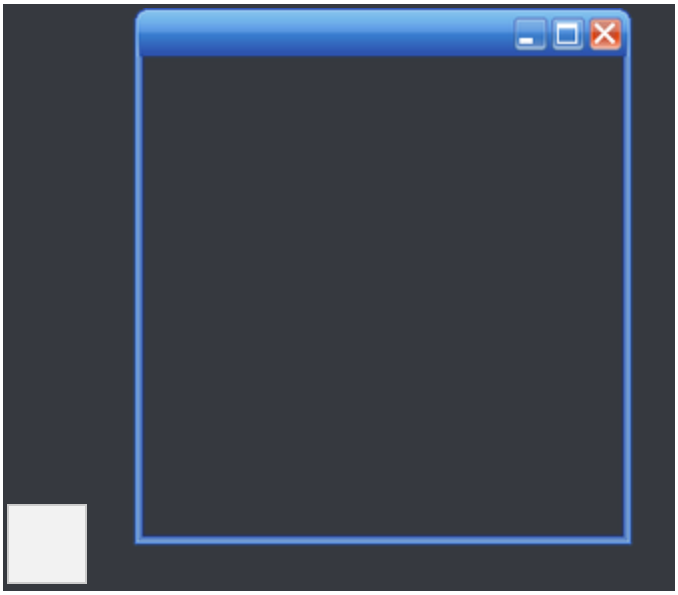
it's when ppl in power are the ones who view weakness as a lack of control

1

Lazzulii

Today at 11:06 PM

BURHHH YES



ψῡχή

Today at 11:06 PM

whereas the truest strength lies in the ability to willingly give yourself up completely, to gain the ultimate control in knowing you have basically no control whatsoever

11:06 PM

that control is not what you seek

11:06 PM

"spirit is the lifelong dirty work of learning to be honest"

ψῡχή

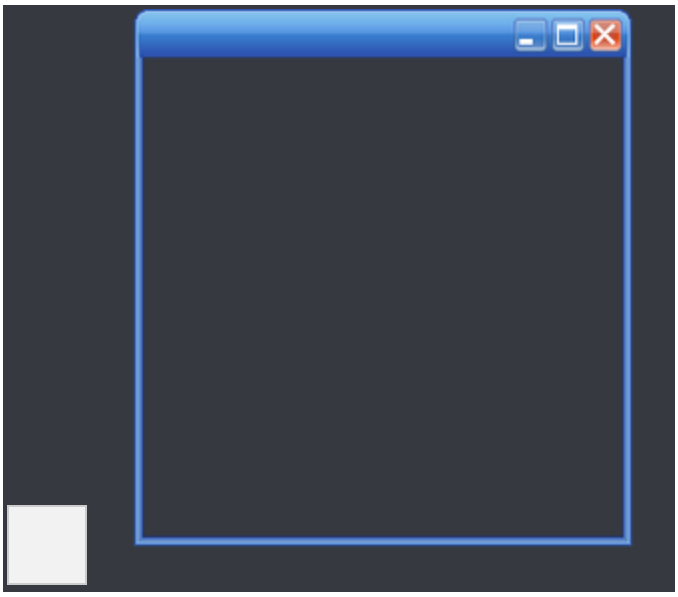
it's when ppl in power are the ones who view weakness as a lack of control



ψῡχή

Today at 11:08 PM

meanwhile real weakness is, well, what they're doing, by giving in to those primitive desires and cravings and wants, that selfishness when really that's a far cry from the truth

@Lazzulii

Wait cause that makes so much sense

- 3/25/2024, talk with a friend, im the person with psykhe in greek as their name haha

Hunter was here - 5/3/2024 >:D >:3

(don’t tell future hunter)

P.S. i have a bajillion audio logs saved up, and looooooong deep talks at night w friends saved up, and it’s funny because i dont even really know why i save them for the most part aside from “ah yes epic talk of the universe and the beauties that surround us everywhere”; i think deep down i also hope that someday my future self will take these logs, take these journal entries, take all these past experiences and conglomerate them into something even great, much like how all else in this reality seems to be based in recursion/iteration/building from what came before to make something “greater,” especially when it comes to art (everything being art / able to be perceived as art so duh of course that iterative / recursive process would be applied to it as well); art influencing new pieces, old art being strung together to form a new piece, branches on a tree splitting to form new branches yet not the same branch it came from, etc. because even the first person to “create” art had to have used materials that they didn’t fundamentally create themselves, like dirt and stone, for the person didn’t make that, yet those materials too in and of themselves have that same ineffable degree of intrinsic meaning simply because it is, simply because it exists, and at some point existed, thus these materials by themselves can be seen as art even when nobody is there to deem it as such, essentially our idea of "objectivity" whereas some things exist regardless of our perception of them or not (quick side note too; say something, either a conscious God or the first node in an infinitely recursive system of creation were to create the very FIRST thing… now, did they create the idea of creation simply through the very action of creation? Or would there need something even higher in place need to exist to permit such a process? Same goes for anything really when it comes to logic, for it seems the very FIRST thing of everything is beyond our system of logic, so, once again, for at least now in this moment I say and appreciate the beauty of saying that nothing makes sense, not even sense itself…. And yet somehow everything still makes perfect “sense”); every thing being everything, yet somehow every thing able to be different from every other thing, yet still entirely interconnected, and everything could also be seen as one thing, much like how a person isn’t seen as the individual cells nor atoms nor quarks that may them up, but as that person, and yet the cells that make them up are themselves separate from the idea of a person, yet they are what literally builds us in the first place… these “old” pieces of art building up a new piece of art, that is both entirely connected yet separate at the same time; a “superposition” (beyond duality) manifesting once again, it appears. How very beautiful indeed it is to be.

P.S.S Low Roar my beloved recently. Speaks straight to my soul

If logic is merely our conceptualization on the act of “making sense of things that didn’t make sense to us before,” whereas things all happen seemingly for a “reason” or multiply “reasons” (that too being another concept of ours, an abstraction of something that can’t fully be portrayed properly by words therefore an approximation yet again), then maybe, if it is possible too to understand how EVERYTHING came to be, including “logic” itself and the idea of creating entirely, thus something creating the idea of creation perhaps simply through being the first to create whether consciously or autonomously, then that too perhaps can be understood by the human mind, making it so ALL things can eventually “make sense,” making it all logical. Everything has a purpose, because it is, because it exists, for meaning is intrinsic. I will continue to try and figure this out, as I always have. Yesterday it felt like my world was falling apart and that it all was meaningless, that I hadn’t really gone anywhere since I took the first step because it seemed like all that I’ve learned through logic wasn’t real knowledge and just playing “pretend”

with everything since it seemed that even logic needed to come from something else higher than logic thus making nothing make sense not even sense itself… but once again, it's all about a shift in perspective. If we can come to know it, even conceive of it, then it fits under the umbrella of logic. On top of that, for me to truly say I never left the first step would be silly; I'm somewhere I never thought I'd ever be before, much like how I never thought before my birth (or anything for that matter) that I'd ever be anything at all (everything is always changing, taking steps, every single instance); I will likely never be able to truly define the absurdity, nor the utmost beauty, that is, to be anything at all. Sometimes I may be overwhelmed by it all, but at least I may always find comfort in my genuine gratitude for anything ever happening in the first place, and for me being able to take part in such an elegant cosmic dance.

- 5/8/2024

~ Meaning is intrinsic, simply through existence in opposition to being a nothing beyond nothingness; these moments last forever, even when no one is left to remember.
Live them full of Love. Make them count. Write your story.
Be what you were put here to be: you, and nobody else.

Keep being yourself, in a world where you can see yourself in anything.
In a world, a reality, all that lies within and beyond perception, where you are tied to each and every thing that ever was and ever will be.
You are never alone, for we're all together even when you can't see, nor hear, nor feel such presence.

And, despite you being everything, you, too, are still here as yourself; every-thing but not quite the same as any other thing, reading this.
How incredible is that? That we're anything at all, friend?
Let alone, being able to be here as ourselves. 💗

WHY DOES RELIGION EXIST

I just hate the world sometimes because theres so many dumb fuck people

And it all stems from nobody knowing hoe to mind their own business

Uraeus ψῦχή

If there was no challenge in life, why would we ever need to grow and become who we are today to beat it in the first place?

Mewo

Specifically though when used to cling to supporters for something like food brands, sports, or political parties

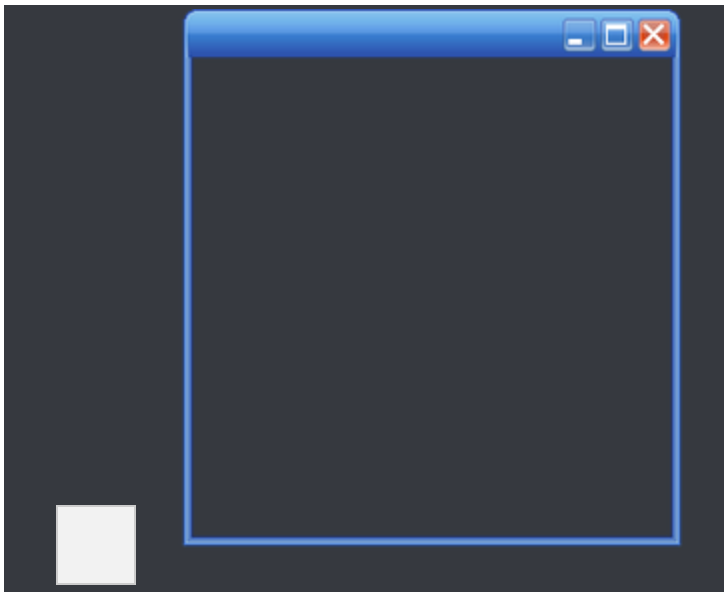
Uraeus ψῦχή

Today at 12:23 PM

Yep. As opposed to being your own open minded rationale, and thinking thru problems individually as they are and with empathy and consideration rather than grouping a ton of totally unique problems all together and letting the party's agenda decide for you; it takes the oh so challenging part of "thinking" out of the equation, and lets ppl be lazy and live in this illusion of a never changing life, a life of conformity and one where they can have a "secure" future, the illusion of something that is guaranteed to them, when really that is just a foolish desire, and why would one wish for a better future when they could always at anytime work to change their perspective at the very least in the now to make it better than they could've imagined before?

Mewo

Its entire concept is based in the idea that we should resist change



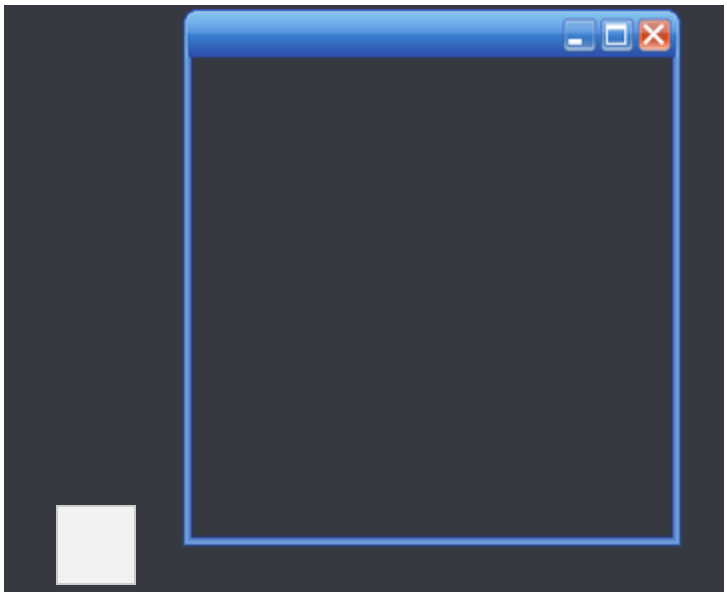
Uraeus ψῦχή

Today at 12:24 PM

And it is stupid, yes. Everything is change. Everything is about progression and transformation. Everything is changing all the time, and that is one of the most beautiful things about our reality, because that's what lets a story be told in the first place. That's why we were able to leave the first step, take any steps at all to begin with. We would be completely stateless, or rather a singularity much like what we're likely encapsulated within, if we were unable to change. Such foolish stupid human beings yet again, I agree

Mewo

That the most beautiful thing we have, which we should treasure, is the ability, and willingness to change. The intelligence to embrace open-mindedness, and the acceptance of what is not the same as us.



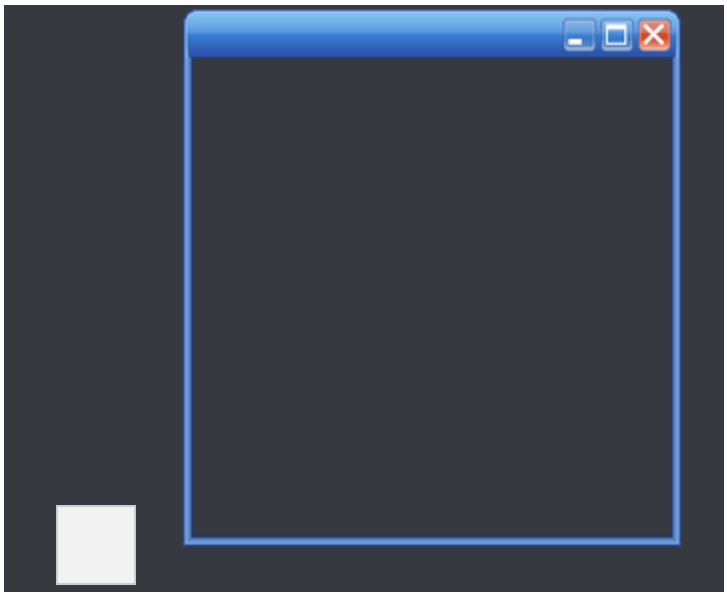
Uraeus ψῦχή

Today at 12:25 PM

Exactly. Everything being one big bouquet of flowers where the differences contrast one another and make it come to life even more, somehow seemingly even more beautiful than just a bouquet of one type of flower.

Mewo

So to be told to forego that and to no-matter-what stay loyal to bullshit, especially whatever the shit conservativism is right now, is so infuriating



Uraeus ψῦχή

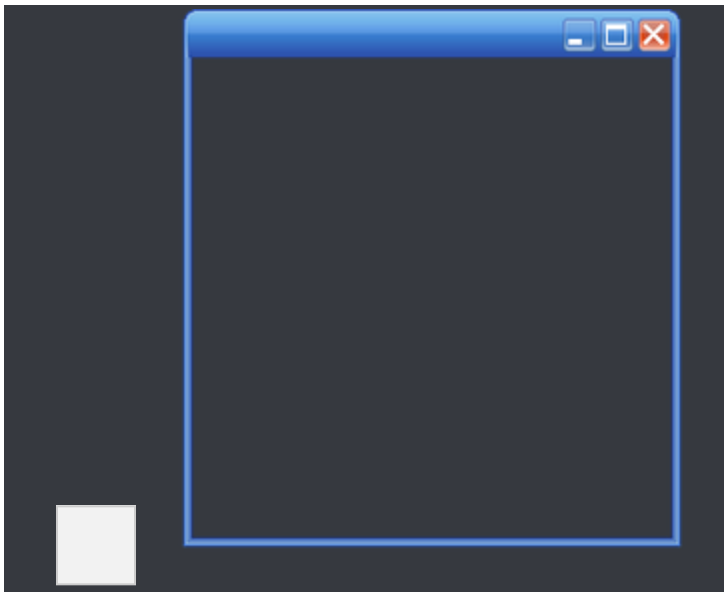
Today at 12:35 PM

This is precisely what I went through 2 years ago, where I was so furious at these idiots; but I'm sure, eventually, you just might come to where I'm at now with it; getting upset and furious over it will usually only hinder your abilities to do something about it. That is them getting to you and in a way still getting what they want, when they make you mad. Something I wrote not even a month ago, is "there are no villains in life, merely lost souls"; whereas if you view everything and everyone to be your friend, then you have even more incentive to handle these problems as if they're friendly discourse, aka you are empathetic to every side and you have perhaps the best course of action to truly getting through to everyone and maybe resolving it. However, it's also a problem that is so far above us, if we were to never fix it we cannot blame ourselves; but, we also can't blame ourselves for wanting to solve it. All we can do, all we've ever done, is try.

And that’s what we gotta keep doing. Try and hope for a better day; we can be some of the ones if not the ones to lead a new agenda towards a better future, it is possible for anything is possible, and we both have the potential to make it happen. We need to keep trying; however, there is no need for anger nor fear, as these are our “friends,” too, you see? Because a lot in life / how you come to be as a person is based on the conditioning imposed onto you by your environment, so there may be no free will at all, but regardless a lot of it seems to be based on things affecting you thatre out of your control and our primitive instincts make us lean more towards the more “probable” ways we come to view them and form connections based on them in our brains; hence, you gotta ask yourself that if you were born with the same brain chemistry, raised in the exact same way as some of these idiots…. Would you have been any better? It’s like the thing we watched in philosophy class for example, where you can’t really fully blame Germans in Nazi Germany for becoming nazis, because that’s all they really ever had on their mind and what they viewed as the ultimate good because they were taught that, and because they were never able to truly see the opposite side to the equation that would’ve allowed them to start seeing the spectrum they could be more open minded on, or maybe they did see but they didn’t have the experience of teaching themselves and were already in too deep with everything else and with their family and loved ones all being on the same side, they would be scared to leave it then, and maybe some did back then, but most don’t.

Mewo

Like I'd be a whole lot more OKAY with the conservative line of thinking if they didnt make it their entire fucking agenda to scream it down everyone's throats and then shackle other's to their own beliefs, and then ridicule, manipulte, psychologically abuse, and even kill them.



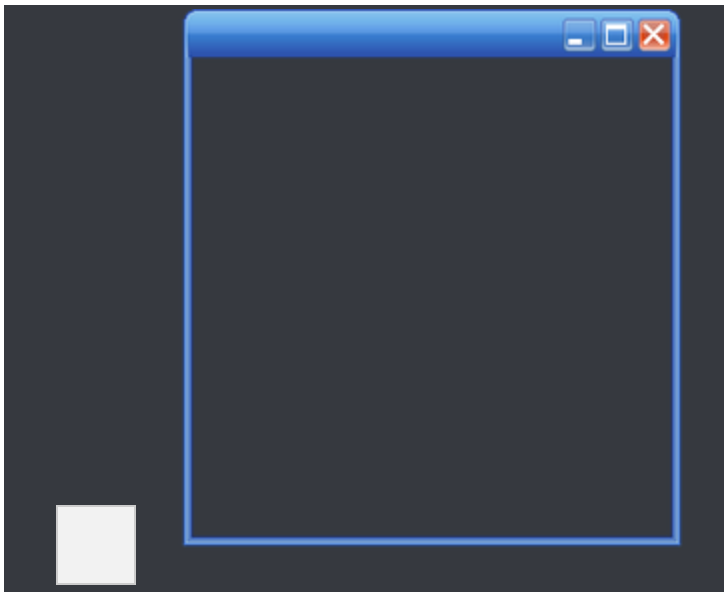
Uraeus ψῦχή

Today at 12:38 PM

Yep. Yep. Narcissism and aggressive ignorance at its finest.

Mewo

Like my nihlistic side is going fucking rampant with malbelief in the human race because we're proving without a doubt, solely our abilities to hate, to kill, and to discriminate, in simply how we treat ourselves.



Uraeus ψῦχή

Today at 12:40 PM

And yet, there are still those who fight against all of that, those who sacrifice and give and give and give themselves up for the sake of others, and those who Love. Don't view humanity in its entirety as a pest, because although we have immense ability to hate, it doesn't mean that's all we are and all we are doomed to do forever. In some way, it is possible we can attain heaven on earth, and it all comes down to our collective perspectives.

12:41 PM

Forgiveness, acceptance of this reality, and Love. "We are just now coming to learn the rules of the game," is another thing I wrote a bit ago in relation to this

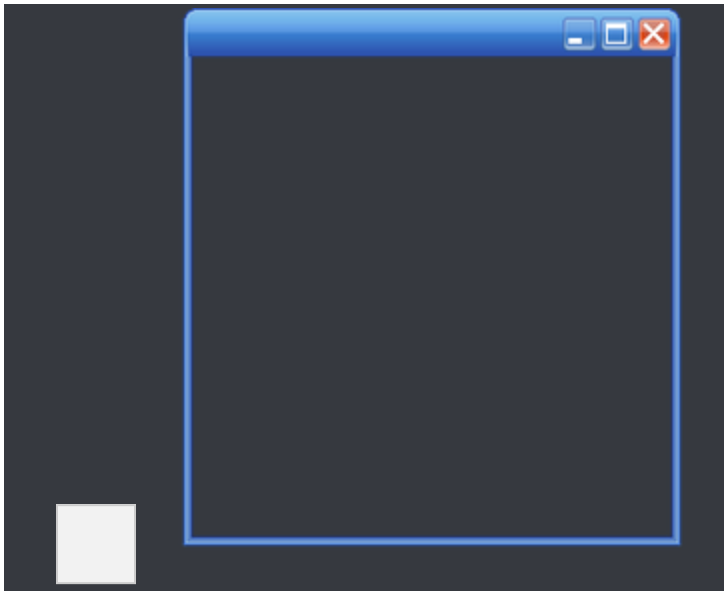
]

Despite the rules being so simple and have being always in front of us.

Mewo

Either we would ENSLAVE them or try to coax them into assimilating, all the while belittling, discriminating, and "de-humanizing" them to an extent where they lose all sense of existence in our "pure and utopian" society



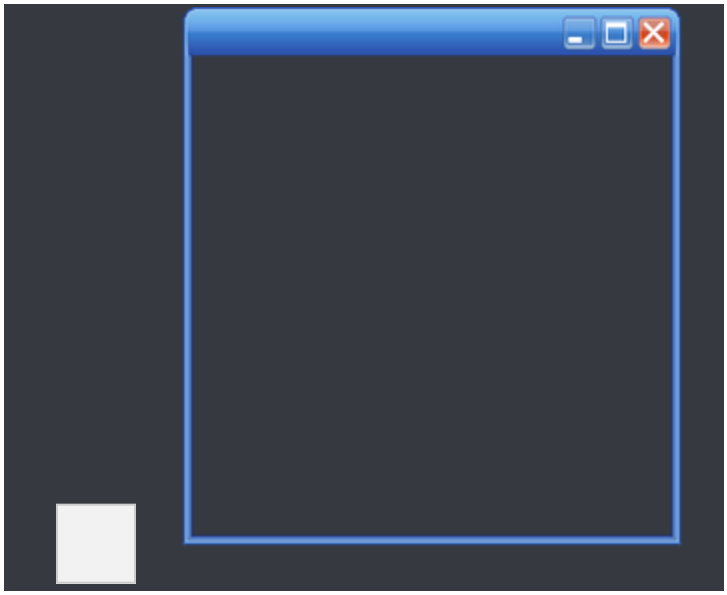
Uraeus ψῦχή

Today at 12:43 PM

That's why people like us, who are open minded and would be able to view the aliens as our friends, truly, and have no fear in meeting them as, if anything, we'd hope for the day to greet them and converse in our diverse cultures and talk of our fascination in the universe, should be the ones to speak with them first, and the same goes with the first ASI.

Mewo

I'm realizing im a little passionate about the subject and philosophy as a whole and it really really grinds my gears rn how people are going about living



Uraeus ψῡχή

Today at 12:43 PM

Like I said, we are literally the same person pretty much, so don’t apologize lol

Uraeus ψῡχή

And it is stupid, yes. Everything is change. Everything is about progression and transformation. Everything is changing all the time, and that is one of the most beautiful things about our reality, because that’s what lets a story be told in the first place. Uraeus ψῦχή

Today at 12:45 PM

And, perhaps an even better analogy I just thought of to this as to why it adds to the beauty; flowers wouldn't bloom, if there was no change.

12:47 PM

And so that bouquet of unique flowers, all those flowers that have changed and mutated and branched off from one another after millions and millions of years of evolution in such specific ways to where they have now arrived at this specific version in which we are able to cherish, would never have been
